GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL.

BENGAL LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

NOTIFICATION.

No. 1L., dated the 2nd January, 1915.—His Excellency the Governor having been pleased to order, under rule 31 (1) of the Bengal Legislative Rules, 1912, the publication of the following Bill, together with the Statement of Objects and Reasons which accompanies it, in the Calcutta Gazette, the Bill and Statement of Objects and Reasons are accordingly hereby published for general information. It is proposed to introduce the Bill, and to refer it to Select Committee, at the meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council to be held on Tuesday, the 19th January, 1915.:—

THE BENGAL STEAM-BOILERS AND PRIME-MOVERS (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1915.

A

BILL

further to amend the Bengal Steam-boilers and Prime-movers Act, 1879.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Bengal Steam-boilers and Prime-movers Act, 1879, in the manner hereinafter appearing ; Ben. Act III of 1879.

It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Short title. 1. This Act may be called the Bengal Steam-boilers and Prime-movers (Amendment) Act, 1915.

Amendment of section 1 of Ben. Act III of 1879. 2. For the third paragraph of section 1 of the Bengal Steam-boilers and Prime-movers Act, 1879 (hereinafter called the said Act), the following shall be substituted, namely :— Ben. Act III of 1879.

" Nothing in this Act shall apply to—

(a) any boiler or prime-mover used on board a steam-vessel, or used upon, and appertaining to, a railway, [Cf. Bur. Act II of 1910, s. 1 (4).]

(b) any boiler or prime-mover used exclusively for domestic purposes at atmospheric pressure, or

(c) any boiler or prime-mover or class of boilers or prime-movers, which the Local Government may, by notification in the Calcutta Gazette, specify in this behalf."

Amendment of section 3. 3. In section 3 of the said Act, the following definition shall be inserted, after the definition of " owner ", namely :—

" ' Inspector ' means any person appointed under section 4 to exercise the powers and perform the duties of an Inspector under this Act."

Amendment of section 4 4. For section 4 of the said Act, the following section shall be substituted, namely :— [Cf. Ben. Act III of 1890, s. 31 ; Bur. Act II of 1910, s. 21.]

" 4. (1) The Local Government may from time to time, by notification in the Calcutta Gazette, make rules for carrying out the purposes and objects of this Act. Power to make rules.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may—

(a) provide for the appointment of inspectors under this Act ;

(b) prescribe the powers and duties of such inspectors and regulate the period of their service ;

(c) regulate the grant of leave to such inspectors and authorize the payment of leave allowances to the said inspectors ;

(d) prescribe the remuneration to be paid to any person appointed to act for an inspector during his absence on leave ;

(e) prescribe the conditions under which an inspector shall, on retirement, receive a pension, gratuity or compassionate allowance, and the amount of such pension, gratuity or compassionate allowance ;

(f) prescribe the conditions under which a pension, gratuity or compassionate allowance may be paid to any inspector injured, or to the relatives of any inspector killed, in the execution of his duty, or who may die in such exceptional circumstances as would, in the opinion of the Government of India, justify the payment of a pension, gratuity or compassionate allowance to his relatives had he been in Government service, whether the injury or death occurred before or after the commencement of the Bengal Steam-boilers and Prime-movers (Amendment) Act, 1914; [Cf. Ben. Act III of 1890, s. 31 (1) (g).]

(g) fix the fees payable on account of certificates granted under this Act;

(h) prescribe the time for which certificates granted under this Act shall remain in force;

(i) provide for the attendance of assessors and prescribe a penalty for non-attendance; and

(j) regulate the procedure on hearing appeals.

(3) The power to make rules conferred by this section is subject to the condition of the rules being made after previous publication.

(4) The date to be specified as that on or after which a draft of rules proposed to be made under this section will be taken into consideration shall not be less than one month from the date on which the draft of the proposed rules was published for general information." [Cf. Ben. Act II of 1902, s. 11.]

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

The objects of this Bill are as follows :—

(1) to provide, in special cases, for the exemption by the Local Government of any boiler or prime-mover or class of boilers or prime-movers from the operation of the Bengal Steam-boilers and Prime-movers Act, 1879 (Ben. Act III of 1879) ;

(2) to provide for similar exemption in the case of any boiler or prime-mover used exclusively for domestic purposes at atmospheric pressure ;

(3) to extend the exemption from the said Act, which already exists in the case of steam-vessels in the port of Calcutta, to steam-vessels in any area in which the said Act is in force ;

(4) to provide for the payment of a pension, gratuity or compassionate allowance to any Boiler Inspector injured, or to the relative of any Boiler Inspector killed, in the execution of his duty, or who may die under such exceptional circumstances as would, in the opinion of the Government of India, justify such payment, the provision being made retrospective so as to apply to cases of death occurring before the Bill becomes law.

II. The Bill is based on sections 1 (4) and 21 of the Burma Steam-boilers and Prime-movers Act, 1910 (Bur. Act II of 1910), and section 31 of the Calcutta Port Act 1890 (Ben. Act III of 1890). Its other provisions are mentioned in the subjoined notes.

Notes on Clauses.

1. Clause 3.—The opportunity has been taken to provide, by this Bill, for a definition of the term "Inspector" which occurs throughout the Act, and has been found to be necessary.

2. Clause 4.—Section 4 of the Act has, by this clause, been substantially recast, and provision has been made in it for the framing of rules for the grant of leave and leave-allowances to Inspectors and for the remuneration of persons appointed from time to time to act for Inspectors, as well as for the grant to Inspectors, on their retirement, of pensions, gratuities and compassionate allowances. The lack of provisions of this nature has proved a source of embarrassment in the working of the Act.

CALCUTTA, THE 2ND JANUARY 1915.

RESOLUTION—No. 53L.R.

READ—

The Report of the Board of Revenue on the Administration of Wards', Attached and Trust Estates in the Presidency of Bengal for the year ending on the 30th June 1914.

Number of estates under management.—The proprietor of the one-third share of the Bhawal estate, a ward of the Court, died in September 1913, leaving a childless widow who was declared a disqualified proprietor, and the properties remained under the management of the Court. Two estates were released during the year, leaving fifty-seven estates under management at the close of the year.

2. Payment of revenue and cesses.—The total amount of revenue and cesses, due from the estates under management, including an arrear demand of Rs. 85,753, amounted to nearly 14 lakhs, of which a little less than 13 lakhs, or 91·5 per cent. was paid. The heaviest balances are due from the Pachetgarh estate, in the district of Midnapore, which suffered severely from floods in August and September 1913, and from the Tagore and Mukharji estates in the 24-Parganas.

3. Rent and cesses due to superior landlords.—The percentage of payment of rent and cesses due to superior landlords was the same as in the previous year, the amount paid being 71·6 per cent. of the amount due. The balance still unpaid is Rs. 2,12,391 out of a total demand of Rs. 7,96,439. In most cases the delay in the discharge of these liabilities is due to disputes with co-sharers and other legal difficulties.

4. Collection of rents and cesses.—The total collections fell to 99·9 per cent of the current demand, against 106·1 in the previous year. The standard of 100 per cent. was exceeded only in the Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions, the highest percentage (113·9) being in the Chittagong Division and the lowest (86·0) in the Presidency Division. The outstanding balances, due to all estates, aggregate nearly 52 lakhs, or 119·6 per cent. on the current demand, against 129·2 per cent. in the preceding year. The balances outstanding in the Dacca, Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions have been reduced, but those in the Burdwan and Presidency Divisions have increased. It is understood that a large part of these arrears cannot be realised, and steps should be taken to reduce the amount outstanding by writing off those that are actually irrecoverable.

There was a decrease of 117 in the number of civil suits and a slight increase of 39 in the number of certificates filed during the year for the recovery of rent and cesses due to wards' estates. Out of 4,814 civil suits for disposal, 3,289 were disposed of, but less than one-third of the amount decreed was realised. The number of certificates disposed of was a little more than half the total number for disposal, 52·1 per cent. of the total claim being realised against 52·8 in the previous year.

5. Payment of debts of estates.—The total liabilities of the estates, which were under the control of the Court of Wards during the year, amounted to nearly 106 lakhs, of which over 12 lakhs were paid off during the year. Over 81 lakhs are due from seven heavily-encumbered estates. As the suit brought by the mortgagees of the Tagore estate for the recovery of their dues is still pending, the Court of Wards has not yet been freed from the management of that estate with its liabilities of nearly 19 lakhs. Of the liabilities of the Bhawal estate, which are returned as nearly 25 lakhs, including the doubtful and disputed claims made by various members of the family against one another, the undisputed balance has so far been ascertained to be nearly 4 lakhs. It will take a considerable time yet to ascertain exactly the total amount of the debt as the work has been found to be difficult. In Bakarganj the two most heavily-encumbered estates have been released.

6. Cost of management and expenditure on improvements.—The cost of management was 12·6 per cent. of the current demand, against 12·1 in the previous year. The standard of 10 per cent. was exceeded in all the divisions. It is, however, noted that efforts are being made to reduce the cost of management where it is considerably above the standard rate and the reduction can be conveniently effected.

The total amount spent on works of improvement, schools and dispensaries was Rs. 1,70,947, or 3·9 per cent. of the current rent and cess demand. The Governor in Council is glad to see that schemes for agricultural demonstrations have been framed in consultation with the Agricultural Department in three estates, but it is not stated whether they have been actually carried out. Further information on this subject should be given in next year's report.

7. Education of wards.—The education of wards continued to receive due attention, and the results attained are on the whole satisfactory. During the year effect was given to the scheme for giving minors under the Court of Wards some training in survey and settlement work before their estates were released. Two wards attended the training camp held during the field-season of 1913-14.

8. The thanks of the Governor in Council are due to the Board for its efficient administration of the estates under the management of the Court of Wards. Miss Cornelia Sorabji, the Lady Assistant to the Court of Wards, has continued to do useful work in looking after the well-being of minor wards and of the ladies of the zenanas of various wards' estates. The commendation bestowed by the Board on the good work of several of the managers of estates under the Court of Wards will be noted.

By order of the Governor in Council.

Dated Calcutta, the 5th January 1915.

The Administration Report on the Howrah Bridge for the year 1913-14.

The income of the bridge amounted to Rs 1,98,748 and the expenditure to Rs. 2,21,850 against Rs. 2,71,724 and Rs. 2,23.890 respectively in the previous year. The deficit of Rs. 23,102 was met from the surplus of the previous year.

The receipts from railway traffic, which are the main sources of revenue, amounted to Rs. 1,72,886 against Rs. 2,50,022 in 1912-13. The apparent decrease of Rs. 77,136 during the year is owing to the receipts of the past year having been swelled by certain overpayments in respect of exempted traffic, principally in edible grain and seeds.

2. The number of vessels that passed through the bridge during 1913-14 and the previous four years is shown below :—

	1913-14.	1912-13.	1911-12.	1910-11.	1909-10.

3. The total number of accidents during the year was 61 against 21, 25 and 27 during the preceding three years. Accidents to cargo and passenger boats numbered 28 against 5 in 1912-13. In seven of these cases six cargo boats and one dingi were lost. No explanation has been given of this increased number of accidents save that the manjis of boats must have been less careful in navigating under the bridge. The number of boats registered shows no marked change and there is no reason to attribute the increase to tidal or weather conditions.

4. The bridge was opened on 286 occasions, of which 56 were during the day and 230 at night.

5. The bridge was kept in thorough repair and generally is in a good state of preservation.

By order of the Governor in Council,

F. A. A. COWLEY,
Offg. Secretary to the Govt. of Bengal.

The applications of candidates from Bengal should be submitted with the required particulars to the undersigned not later than the 25th January 1915. No candidate will be considered who is not possessed of high qualifications and who is not a bona fide native of Bengal.

Application forms may be obtained from the Personal Assistant to the Director of Public Instruction, Bengal.

W. W. HORNELL,

Director of Public Instruction, Bengal.

Nos. 731-743, dated Simla, the 1st September 1908.

RESOLUTION—By the Government of India, Home Department.

THE Government of India have for some time past had under their consideration the question of encouraging the scientific study of Sanskrit and Arabic by natives of India. They believe that great advantage will result from aiding students to acquire the critical and scientific methods of Western scholarship, by studying the classics under European Professors and by acquiring a knowledge of French and German, which is indispensable for making full use of the researches of European Orientalists.

2. They have accordingly decided, with the sanction of the Secretary of State, to allot for the present four scholarships tenable in Europe—three for the study of Sanskrit and one for the study of Arabic. Not more than two will be awarded annually. The scholarships will be open to well-qualified students with a genuine taste for oriental studies and to gentlemen employed as Professors of Sanskrit and Arabic in India. The value of each scholarship will be £150 a year, and it will be tenable for two years. The Secretary of State will decide the courses of study of each scholarship-holder and the special conditions to be observed, if necessary, by students who elect to study in continental Europe rather than in England. A scholarship-holder will be provided with a free second class passage to Europe, and also with a return passage if he completes the full period of residence or is compelled by sickness to return within that period. He will be required for disciplinary purposes to conform to such rules as the Secretary of State may make in this behalf.

3. In the first year one scholarship will be awarded for Sanskrit and one for Arabic. In the following year two scholarships for Sanskrit only will be awarded. Each Local Government or Administration is invited to submit, during the current financial year, the name of one candidate for a Sanskrit and one for an Arabic scholarship, and in the following year the names of two candidates for a Sanskrit scholarship, this procedure being followed in alternative years. It is requested that the names of the candidates may be accompanied by a full description of their qualifications, and with the views and recommendations of the Local Government thereon. The power of selection will rest with the Government of India, who will award the scholarships to those whom they may consider best fitted to hold them. Local Governments and Administrations are requested to submit their recommendations so as to reach the Government of India by the 31st March of each year at latest. Those for the current year should be sent in as soon as possible.

ORDER.—Ordered that a copy of this Resolution be communicated to the Government of Bengal, for information and guidance.

No. 1998, dated Delhi, the 23rd December 1914.

From—THE HON'BLE MR. H. SHARP, C.I.E., Joint Secretary to the Government of India, Department of Education,

To—The Secretary to the Government of Bengal, General (Education) Department.

THE State scholarship granted this year for the scientific study of Arabic in Europe having become vacant by the resignation of its holder, the Government of India consider that it may perhaps be found possible to re-award the scholarship next year in addition to the two scholarships which will be available for the study of Sanskrit. I am accordingly to request that, with the permission of the Governor in Council, the usual notice may be published inviting applications for the scholarship and the nomination of the Local Government submitted to the Government of India by the 1st March 1915.

REPORT ON PUBLIC INSTRUCTION IN BENGAL FOR 1913-14.

Introductory.

1. The total number of all classes of institutions, both public and private, decreased during the year under review from 42,903 to 42,835, or by 68; while that of pupils attending them increased from 1,718,623 to 1,747,608, or by 28,985. The decrease of 68 schools is the net result of a loss of 118 in the number of public schools and a gain of 50 in that of private institutions. Public institutions decreased from 40,686 to 40,568, while private institutions increased from 2,217 to 2,267. An increase in the number of pupils is recorded in the case of both public and private institutions. The number of pupils in public schools increased from 1,662,765 to 1,687,747, or by 24,982; and that of pupils in private institutions from 55,858 to 59,861, or by 4,003. Of the total number of pupils in all classes of schools, 1,502,318 were males and 245,290 females, as compared with 1,482,270 and 236,353, respectively, of the preceding year.

Total number of schools and pupils.

Different classes of public institutions.

2. Of the total number of public institutions, 51 were arts and professional colleges, 596 high schools, 1,874 middle schools, 34,508 primary and 3,539 special schools. The corresponding figures for the previous year were 49 ; 553 ; 1,819 ; 34,905 ; and 3,360 respectively.

Total expenditure on public instruction.

3. The total expenditure on public instruction for the year 1913-14 was Rs. 2,20,76,595 against Rs. 2,02,70,578 of 1912-13. Of this, Rs. 88,99,091 came from public funds and Rs. 1,31,77,504 from private sources, as compared with Rs. 82,45,335 and Rs. 1,20,25,243, respectively, of the previous year. The expenditure incurred from different sources during the years 1912-13 and 1913-14 is shown below :—

Head.	1913-14.	1912-13.	Difference.
	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.
Provincial Revenues ...	64,99,336	64,97,260	2,076
District Funds	22,22,587	15,87,425	6,35,162
Municipal Funds	1,69,839	1,55,764	14,075
Native States	7,329	4,886	2,443
Fees	95,50,070	86,62,382	8,87,688
Subscriptions, endowments, and other sources.	36,27,434	33,62,861	2,64,573
Total ...	2,20,76,595	2,02,70,578	18,06,017

It will be seen from the above figures that there was an all-round increase of expenditure during the year, the most marked increases having been under the heads of "District Funds" and "Fees." The former was almost entirely due to the grants made to District Boards from Imperial revenues, and the latter to the increase in the number of scholars in colleges and high and middle English schools. The increase in subscriptions, etc., may be attributed to the greater interest which people are now taking in certain grades of education.

Systems of education.

4. As in the preceding year, the systems of education prevailing in Eastern and Western Bengal were maintained intact.

CHAPTER II.

Controlling Agencies.

Indian Educational Service.

5. During the year under review 2 additional posts were added, viz., the post of Assistant Director of Public Instruction for Muhammadan Education and that of Professor of Mechanical Engineering, Sibpur. The cadre, as provisionally sanctioned, includes 45 appointments. The strength of the service at the end of the year was 47 posts on ordinary rates of pay, and 3 posts on special rates of pay.

Provincial Educational Service

6. The provisionally-sanctioned cadre stands at 139 appointments : 18 posts were added in the year under review, and 3 abolished. The cadre on 31st March 1914 thus contained 154 posts. Among the additions during the period under review were 5 appointments in class VIII created for two years for special inspecting officers for Muhammadan education, and 5 posts in class VIII for additional assistant inspectresses.

Subordinate Educational Service.

7. During the period under review 9 posts were added. The cadre contained 812 appointments on 31st March 1914.

Lower Subordinate Educational Service.

8. The cadre consisted of 758 appointments on 31st March 1914.

Officers not within the classified lists.

9. The number of posts outside the grades on 31st March 1914 was 377 ; of these, 35 were created during the year. Of the officers, 20 drew salaries of Rs. 200 or more, and 357 salaries ranging from Rs. 15 to Rs. 150.

10. The new post of Assistant Director of Public Instruction for Muhammadan Education was filled by the appointment of an Indian Educational Service officer already in the service. Direction.

11. The table below shows the strength of the inspecting agency on 31st March 1914 :— Inspecting agency.

Division.	Inspectors and Additional Inspectors.	Assistant Inspectors (including those for Muhammadan Education.	Deputy and Additional Deputy Inspectors.	Sub-Inspectors.	Assistant Sub-Inspectors.	Assistant Inspectresses.	Inspectresses.

There were also employed 11 assistant sub-inspectors and 144 inspecting pandits or guru-instructors, who do not render qualifying service.

The chief additions to the inspecting staff were the 5 assistant inspectorships for Muhammadan education and the 5 assistant inspectress-ships already referred to. The incumbents of the former are to have their head-quarters at Murshidabad, Burdwan, Mymensingh, Comilla and Bogra respectively. The respective head-quarters of the new assistant inspectresses are to be at Berhampore, Midnapore, Faridpur and Calcutta.

CHAPTER III.

Collegiate Education.

Arts Colleges.

12. There has been no change in the number of arts colleges in the Presidency, or of Government or Municipal colleges; but the number of aided colleges has been added to by the inclusion, during the year, of the Diocesan College for Girls, the St. Paul's Cathedral Mission College (formerly known as the Church Missionary Society College), and the Serampore College, which were formerly unaided. There were thus 34 arts colleges in the Province, of which 8 were under Government management, 1 under Municipal management, 13 were aided, and 12 unaided. The total number of students was 14,746—an increase of 1,850 over the number for the preceding year: of these, 13,395 were Hindus, 1,155 Muhammadans, and 196 were of other races. Colleges and students.

13. The total direct expenditure on account of arts colleges increased from Rs. 15,59,239 in 1912-13 to Rs 16,13,511, i.e., by Rs. 54,272. Of this total, Rs. 5,63,135 came from Provincial revenues; Rs. 8,27,443 from fees; and Rs. 2,22,933 from other sources. The expenditure on Government colleges was Rs 7,49,000 against Rs. 7,99,144 in the preceding year, and on grants-in-aid to private colleges Rs. 93,032 against Rs. 87,902. Expenditure.

14. A grant of Rs. 89,000 was, as formerly, available from Imperial sources for distribution among private colleges in West Bengal. Of this, Rs. 3,786 was granted to the University to meet a deficit in connexion with the maintenance of students' messes in Calcutta; and the balance distributed on the recommendation of the Syndicate of the University, chiefly in library, laboratory, or equipment grants. The annual Imperial grant of Rs. 40,000 also was available for East Bengal colleges, and was spent on Government colleges in accordance with existing practice; but it has been decided to reserve the whole of this amount in future for the improvement of private Imperial grants.

colleges in East Bengal. As the grant of Rs. 89,000 referred to has been made a fixed recurring grant, Rs. 1,29,000 will thus be annually available for the improvement of private colleges in the Presidency.

15. Some progress was made during the year in connexion with the provision of hostels for Calcutta colleges out of the grants made in 1911-12 and 1912-13; but much remains to be done. Indeed the attempt to carry out this scheme is a task of exasperating difficulty. It is almost impossible to find suitable sites at a reasonable cost; and even when the sites are found, the construction of suitable buildings within the amounts available is an almost insuperable difficulty.

Government Colleges.

Presidency College.

16. On 31st March 1914 there were 923 students against 902 on 31st March 1913.

The system of control of the undergraduate work has been carried a stage further by the introduction of class records so framed as to preserve a detailed record of every student's work during his four undergraduate years. The test examinations at the end of the 2nd and 4th years have consequently been abolished, as the fitness of a student for University examinations can be better decided by reference to his record. The system is being extended to embrace regular practical examinations in science subjects.

The work of the seminars showed a distinct advance: the organization is more complete, and students have ceased to be apathetic, with the result that a co-operation in study previously unknown is developing between the members of the seminars and the presiding professors. Nevertheless the value of the seminars is considerably diminished by the fact that many students are primarily engaged in studying law, and regard their reading for the M.A. as a secondary consideration. The further expansion of the college is under consideration. The extension and further equipment of the chemical laboratory, for which Rs. 34,000 was granted, was taken up towards the end of the year.

Applications were made during the year for affiliation in botany up to the B.A. and B.Sc. standards; in geology and physiology up to the M.Sc. standard; and in philosophy up to the M. A. standard.

A new development in organization was the institution of a students' consultative committee elected by the students; this committee meets from time to time to confer with the Principal on matters relating to the general body of students. The experiment is reported to have justified itself already.

Dacca College.

17. The number of students on 31st March 1914 was 780 against 767 on 31st March 1913. A definite limit was set to admissions into the 1st and 3rd year classes. The staff was strengthened during the year by the addition of a professor of philosophy in the Indian Educational Service and a demonstrator of physics in the Provincial Educational Service. As a consequence of the former appointment, the college was granted affiliation up to B.A. honours standard in philosophy.

Rajshahi College.

18. The number of pupils on 31st March 1914 was 761 against 656 on 31st March 1913. A scheme for the expansion and improvement of the college and its attached institutions is under consideration. The realization of this will solve the existing difficulties of hostel and class accommodation, which are great, the needs of the college having outgrown the capacities of the present buildings. Some immediate relief will be offered by the early completion of the new physical laboratory, which was expected to be ready by the opening of the new session in July 1914. The college has been affiliated in history up to the B.A. honours standard. The problem of the residence of the students of the college, especially of the Muhammadan students, is acute.

Chittagong College.

19. The number on the rolls on 31st March 1914 was 172 against 132 of the preceding year. A new Hindu hostel is under construction.

Hooghly College.

20. The number of students on 31st March 1914 was 213 against 190 in the preceding year. The college has recently been granted additional affiliation in physics and chemistry up to the B.A. and B.Sc. pass standards, and in mathematics up to the B.Sc. honours standard. Until September 1913 the college building accommodated the college, the madrasa, and the collegiate school. On the removal of the school to a rented house the rooms vacated were divided between the college and the madrasa; this afforded some relief to both institutions, but a complete solution of the problem of accommodation involves considerable additional buildings, a scheme for which is under consideration. A hostel for Muhammadan students was completed and occupied during the year, and the extension of the Hindu hostel is under consideration.

Krishnagar College.

21. The number of students on the rolls on 31st March 1914 was 177 against 143 on the corresponding date in the previous year, and there is evidence that the increase will continue.

Sanskrit College.

22. The number of students was 145 on 31st March 1914 as against 115 of the previous year. The urgent need of the college is improved and extended accommodation.

CHAPTER IV.

The Secondary Education of Indian Boys.

Schools and pupils.

23. The year under review showed a general increase in the number of secondary schools and secondary school pupils, but the returns for middle vernacular schools showed a decline in both parts of the Presidency.

The teaching of English.

24. The great weakness of secondary schools is the weakness of the English teaching in them. The defect is generally admitted, but the obstacles in the way of improvement are many and great. Efficient teachers generally are few, and the majority of those teachers who offer themselves as capable of teaching English have not the necessary command of the language.

The Hastings House School.

25. Many prominent men in Bengal have been emphasizing for a long time the great need that exists for a residential school for Bengali boys conducted, as far as possible, on the lines of an English public school. During the year under review the Government of Bengal decided to satisfy, if possible, this demand without further delay. The Government of India agreed to lend Hastings House for this purpose, and a scheme is now before that Government for establishing the school on that property. Their idea is that the school should be temporarily housed at Hastings House, pending the working out of a scheme for re-establishing it outside Calcutta on a permanent basis and in buildings of its own.

Improvement of secondary education.

26. It has not yet been possible to introduce any general scheme for the improvement of secondary education. Funds are not available, and the scheme submitted in 1908 would not meet the exigencies of the present situation. During the year under review the bulk of the Imperial recurring grant of Rs. 1,50,000 for the improvement of aided high and middle English schools was spent in giving increased grants to aided schools, the only departure from the general conditions being that a grant was given to the Serampore Collegiate School, an institution previously unaided. A further recurring assignment of Rs. 2,26,000 was granted during the year, which, pending the sanction of a scheme for its distribution, was earmarked for financing building projects in connexion with secondary schools and for the purchase of furniture for Government schools. These grants should make it possible to secure some degree of improvement. A definite scale of staff has regularly been kept in view in aiding schools, but the degree to which compliance with it is insisted on necessarily depends on the resources for distribution at the command of the Department. Little can be done to raise the level of efficiency in those high and middle schools which are still unaided.

School buildings.

27. In general unaided schools are wretchedly housed. Efforts to ensure that aided schools shall be provided with a decent pucka plinthed school-house have been fairly successful. Here also little more can be done until more money is available.

High schools.

28. The optional subjects of the Matriculation course have been widely introduced except geography and mechanics, which require specially-trained teachers and fairly elaborate apparatus, and are seldom found except in Government high schools. Drawing is taught as a compulsory subject in Government and aided high schools; but it is not required for the Matriculation, and therefore little attention is paid to it. The same may be said of hygiene. During the year three specially-selected lecturers toured the Province, delivering in selected schools lectures, illustrated by lantern slides, on sanitation with special reference to the prevention and cure of malaria. The local public were usually invited to attend, and accepted the invitation in large numbers. The scheme is at present sanctioned for three years; it is expected to serve a useful purpose.

Certain Government schools have gardens attached to them, ostensibly to afford pupils an opportunity of learning some elementary principles of plant life; but their value is negligible.

As in previous years, the superior inspecting agency of the Department inspected high schools on behalf of the University, which almost without exception endorsed the recommendations of the inspectors. Most of the schools under private management have been given temporary recognition only owing to their numerous defects.

Middle schools.

29. Middle vernacular schools in which the teaching of English is prohibited are on the decline both in number and in efficiency, in spite of efforts by the Department to encourage them. The general public has little interest in schools which do not include English in their curriculum.

Circle schools.

30. The general opinion of educational and other officers is that circle schools have outlived their usefulness except in a few backward tracts, and that their abolition is necessary. Elimination is already in progress.

Middle school examinations.

31. The demand for the restoration of the departmental examination at the end of the middle stage continues, and the present arrangements for the conduct of middle-school scholarship examinations do not meet with general favour.

Manual instruction

32. The introduction of manual instruction would go far to counteract some of the worst defects of secondary schools for Bengali boys. It is hoped that it will soon be possible to select 5 or 6 schools in each division for the introduction of instruction in woodwork by special teachers.

CHAPTER V.

The Primary Education of Indian Boys.

Number of schools.

33. The number of primary schools for boys decreased from 28,089 in 1912-13 to 27,461 during the year under review: that is, by 628. Of the total number of schools—27,461—those returned as upper primary were 3,264; and 24,197 were returned as lower primary. On comparing these figures with those for the previous year, it appears that there has been a decrease of 114 upper primary and of 514 lower primary schools. Both Eastern and Western Bengal show a decrease in the number of their upper primary schools; but the decrease in the number of lower primary schools has been confined to Western Bengal alone. The apparent lack of enthusiasm for upper primary schools must be attributed mainly to the fact that purely vernacular education is not in itself popular. Any education beyond the lower primary stage, which does not admit of the teaching of English, is not sufficiently attractive to ensure the progress of upper primary vernacular institutions. Some weight must be attached also to the organization of the upper primary courses. The course in vogue in Western Bengal is merely a truncated middle vernacular course, while the course in vogue in Eastern Bengal is merely a repetition of the final year's work of a lower primary school. The increase in the number of lower primary schools in Eastern Bengal is due mainly to the number of these institutions of an improved type which have been founded in panchayati unions and for which funds have been liberally given to District Boards. This scheme of expansion of primary education has just been introduced into Western Bengal; and it is hoped that succeeding reports will be able to announce an all-round advance in the numerical strength of primary institutions. The reasons for the decrease in the number of lower primary schools in Western Bengal are stated to be—

(1) the floods in the Burdwan Division, which resulted in the loss of several hundred schools;

(2) the discouraging of ephemeral institutions by inspectors and a close scrutiny of the conditions of schools for the purposes of the grant-in-aid rules; and

Despondency as regards the situation is not justified, but the general position demands attention. Exceptional conditions have prevailed in Western Bengal. Two conclusions emerge. The first is the general desire for English education. The second is the tendency to regard an education which does not go beyond the primary stage as of little or no value for its own sake, and the consequent reluctance to send a boy to a primary school, or at any rate to keep him there for the greater part of the course, unless the parent sees some prospect of sending him on to at least a middle English school. The whole system of primary education needs to be overhauled in the light of the needs of the various sections of the population.

Number of pupils

34. The total number of pupils attending primary schools on 31st March 1914 was returned as 1,027,684 : 979,520 boys and 48,164 girls. A comparison of these figures with those of the previous year shows a total decrease of 17,716 pupils, viz., 14,796 boys and 2,920 girls. It is satisfactory to observe that the number of Muhammadan pupils under instruction has increased from 459,037 to 461,711, or by 2,674. For the decline in the number of Hindu pupils in primary schools it is not necessary to look beyond those features in the present situation to which allusion is made in the paragraph immediately above. The conditions in the Burdwan Division have certainly been exceptional. It is mainly to the floods that one must ascribe the apparent loss of 828 schools and 25,694 pupils which the figures show for that division for the year under review. According to the figures for the period under review, 28 per cent. of the boys of school-going age and 6·4 per cent. of the girls of school-going age were receiving primary instruction; the figures of the preceding year were 28·4 and 6·1 per cent., respectively. These figures refer to primary schools only; they do not take into account the pupils included in the primary classes of secondary schools. The total number of such pupils is 205,075. The total number therefore of pupils in the primary stage of instruction was, on 31st March 1914, 1,232,759. The figures of the preceding year were 1,242,124, of whom 1,045,400 were in the primary schools and 196,724 in secondary schools. These figures indicate a decrease of 9,365 in the number of pupils under primary instruction in all grades of schools.

Relative number of Hindus and Muhammadans under instruction.

35. Of the total number of pupils in primary schools for boys, 547,335 were Hindus and 461,711 were Muhammadans. It appears that, during the year under review, the number of Hindu pupils declined from 567,214 to 547,335, that is, by 19,879 or 3·5 per cent.; while the number of Muhammadans increased from 459,037 to 461,711, that is, by 2,674 or ·5 per cent. The Hindus have now 32·6 per cent. of their boys of school-going age in primary institutions, and the Muhammadans, 24·3 per cent. The figures for the previous year were 33·8 and 24·1 per cent., respectively. It is satisfactory to note that the decrease in the number of primary schools noted above has not affected the attendance of Muhammadan pupils. It should be noted, however, that an increase of 2,674 Muhammadan pupils cannot be regarded as in any real sense a substantial advance; for it must be remembered that in Eastern Bengal, where the population is predominantly Muhammadan, the number of primary schools has been increased. It should be noted here that in Eastern Bengal considerable encouragement has been given in the past to the instruction of Muhammadan children. Out of the grant of Rs. 2,85,000, no less than Rs. 34,600 was spent in this way in the year 1913-14.

Expenditure.

36. The total direct expenditure on primary schools during the year was returned at Rs. 32,30,570 : of this amount, Rs. 1,48,502 or 4·6 per cent. came from Provincial revenues ; Rs. 10,77,290 or 33·4 per cent. from District funds ; and Rs. 51,153, or 1·5 per cent. from Municipal funds. The remainder—Rs. 19,53,625 or 60·5 per cent.—was derived from private sources. In 1912-13, the total expenditure amounted to Rs. 27,97,957, of which Rs. 1,29,100 or 4·6 per cent. came from Provincial revenues ; Rs. 6,43,550 or 23·1 per cent. from District funds ; Rs. 52,486 or 1·8 per cent. from Municipal funds ; and Rs. 19,72,821 or 70·5 per cent. from fees and other sources. The total increase of recurring expenditure, therefore, in the year under review was Rs. 4,32,613. This large addition to the funds spent on primary education must be attributed almost entirely to the grants made from Imperial revenues.

37. Some description of the amount of the Imperial subsidies made in 1913-14 for primary instruction as well as of the schemes financed thereby is called for. For primary vernacular instruction these grants amounted to Rs. 10,00,000 for capital and Rs. 3,65,000 for recurring charges. Owing to the manner in which these grants were put at the disposal of the Education Department, it was found that for capital charges in 1913-14 a total sum of Rs. 13,65,000 was available, while in the same year the recurring expenditure of the Rs. 6,00,000 grant of 1912-13 became operative. In the same way a scheme for the spending of the recurring grant of Rs. 3,65,000 is now under the consideration of Government ; this scheme, if sanctioned, would ordinarily take effect in the current year 1914-15.

38. The expenditure of Rs. 13,65,000 on primary education was sanctioned in 1913-14 on the following basis of distribution :—

(i) Model primary school.—A sum of Rs. 6,90,000 has been set aside for the establishment of these institutions on the lines of the Eastern Bengal panchayati union school scheme ; of this amount, Rs. 4,00,000 will be spent in Eastern Bengal and the remainder, in Western Bengal.

(ii) A sum of Rs. 3,95,000 has been sanctioned for the establishment throughout the Presidency of an improved type of guru-training schools.

(iii) New buildings for aided primary schools, the establishment of schools in backward areas, and the equipment of schools absorb the remainder of the grant, sums of Rs. 1,50,000, Rs. 30,000, and Rs. 1,00,000 being apportioned, respectively, to these objects.

All this money has not been disbursed in the year under review. A sum of Rs. 6,42,065 for the capital cost of primary schools has been given to District Boards ; and the remainder will be apportioned as necessity arises. The method of distribution of these funds illustrates the general lines of advance : the establishment of an improved type of primary institution in well-defined areas and the creation of effective centres of training for primary schoolmasters.

39. With the recurring grant of Rs. 6,00,000, sanctioned in 1912-13, the long-desired improvement in the pay of the primary schoolmaster has been made possible, and enough money has been provided to maintain such new model schools as were built up to the close of the year preceding that now under review. The actual amounts distributed in the year 1913-14 were as follows :—

(a) For the increase of the salaries of trained teachers by Rs. 3 and of all untrained teachers by Re. 1 ... Rs. 4,47,648

(b) For the maintenance of model board schools ... ,, 96,164

The balance, amounting to Rs. 56,188, is being spent on the improvement of aided primary school buildings and equipment. As explained above, the recurring grant of Rs. 3,65,000 was set aside in 1913-14 for capital charges. Its distribution as a recurring grant will be described in next year's Annual Report. In Eastern Bengal, the grant of Rs. 2,85,000 (a portion of the original Imperial grant of Rs. 3,33,000 for the old Province of Eastern Bengal and Assam) is still spent on the following objects :—

(c) Capitation grants for the teaching of Urdu.

Some redistribution of this grant of Rs. 2,85,000 is felt to be desirable. This question is now under consideration.

General remarks.

40. More money has now been made available, but much remains to be done before we can discern even a distant prospect of a network of sound primary schools throughout the Presidency. Training schools for vernacular masters have to be improved and extended. The salaries of teachers still fall far short of the minimum which efficiency demands. The housing and equipment of schools still leave much to be desired. Funds are still inadequate, but money spent on new buildings and more particularly on equipment is often largely wasted. But the greatest need is a simple curriculum which, while it would recognize the essentials of an effective primary school system, would ignore the limitations neither of the children nor of the teachers. The primary school system should not be water-tight. But we can never hope to break down illiteracy and raise the general standard of intelligence so long as the poorest classes regard primary education of little, if any, value except as a means of sending their boys on to schools where English is taught in the further hope, as a rule, of raising them up to the already-overcrowded sphere of clerical and kindred employment. The position is not really affected by the fact that the large number of boys who go to primary schools do not proceed to any institution of a higher grade. These boys are mainly those on whose account the parents have had to abandon their ambitions, and they do not, as a rule, remain for the whole or the greater part of even the lower primary course. We may fairly claim that certain lines for definite advancement have been laid down and that certain progress has been made along those lines. Improvement of the pay of the primary school teacher and the additional remuneration to the trained pandit is for example a genuine step in advance. The provision of funds for the improvement of gurn-training schools, combined with the expansion of the model primary school system, marks a definite stage of progress ; but all these will be of little avail unless and until the primary school secures the confidence of those sections of the population whose urgent need it is that their children should acquire those rudiments of knowledge without which the general raising of these several communities is impossible. No general educational system can be without its effect on the social structure ; but no educational system can be regarded as sound unless each of the various stages of it is to some extent complete in itself. The existing estate of affairs in Bengal indicates that we have largely failed to appeal to those who more than all others depend for their advancement on primary education.

41. During the year under review the two sections of the Presidency remained distinct in the matter of primary school curriculum. The creation of a single course of instruction is now under consideration, and in this connexion the whole question of the primary school course will be considered.

CHAPTER VI.

The Training of Teachers for Indian Schools.

Introductory.

42. This chapter deals with institutions for the training of masters for Indian schools, those for mistresses being dealt with in Chapter VIII along with the general question of the education of Indian girls and women.

During the year under review there has been no change in the character and scope of the training of teachers described in the last year's Report. The distribution of the training institutions in the two parts of the Presidency remains almost the same, but their number has declined to 130 schools while their attendance has increased to 2,431.

In the Province there are now for the training of the members of the subordidate inspecting staff and of secondary and primary teachers 3 colleges, 6 normal schools, 117 guru-training schools, and 4 special training classes.

David Hare Training College.

43. The college began the sixth year of its existence on the 1st July 1913. There were 25 Hindus and 2 Muhammadans under training during the year: 21 graduates came from Bengal and 6 from Bihar. The college makes no provision for the training of outside candidates; it provides for the training of graduates in Government employ only. All the 27 students sat for the B.T. examination and all of them passed, 10 being placed in the first division. The total direct cost of the college was Rs. 36,217, the whole of which was met from Provincial revenues. The average cost of training each pupil was Rs. 1,341-5-11. The college is still in its infancy. Located in a rented house composed of five small rooms, it is incapable of expansion. The inadequacy of the present arrangements will be obvious when it is borne in mind that the Education Department has as yet been unable to touch the problem of providing some sort of training for the very large number of untrained teachers in non-Government schools. Trained graduates are needed in every sphere of educational work. Compared with the needs of Western Bengal, the present outturn, notwithstanding cent. per cent. successes, is exceedingly meagre. The question of the future development of the college involves the provision of extended accommodation so that a larger number of candidates may be admitted for training. The problem of providing this accommodation is engaging the attention of the Department.

Dacca Training College.

44. This college opened its fourth session on 9th July 1913. During the year 53 students, including 15 inspecting officers, 27 Government school teachers, 7 aided or board school teachers, and 4 outside candidates, were under training. This college, unlike the David Hare College, receives for training teachers in non-Government schools. There were 21 students in the B.T. class and 32 in the L.T. classes. Out of 32 students in the L.T. classes, 9 were Muhammadans. At the B.T. examination all the 21 candidates sat and all passed, 7 being placed in the first division. At the L.T. examination 16 sat for the examination, and 13 passed. The nature study class for the training of vernacular teachers for the improved type of guru-training schools in Eastern Bengal was this year placed entirely under the control of the training college. Dr. N. Gupta was in charge of this class, to which 18 vernacular teachers were deputed; 13 of them appeared at the final examination and all passed. The total direct cost of the college was Rs. 63,623, the whole of which was met from Provincial revenues.

The L M.S Class at Bhawanipur.

45 This class had 8 pupils on its rolls on the 31st of March 1914 Grants from Provincial revenues amounted to Rs. 2,040.

Training schools for vernacular masters

46. There are 5 Government training schools of the first grade in the Presidency, 1 in each of the five divisions. In addition to these, there is one aided school at Krishnagar under the management of the Church Missionary Society. These schools are intended for the training of vernacular masters for the vernacular classes of secondary institutions and for the guru-training schools. Students are prepared for departmental examinations, which still differ in the Western and Eastern portions of the Presidency, the training school curricula in Western and Eastern Bengal not yet having been co-ordinated. The Eastern Bengal schools still follow the two years' course; while in Western Bengal the course extends over three years. The following table summarizes the facts with reference to the various training schools :—

Name of school.	Number under training.	Number passed at the final examination.	Total cost.
			Rs.
(1) Calcutta Training School	91	24	19,981
(2) Hooghly Training School	82	17	13,654
(3) Church Missionary Society's Training School.	26	3	7,131
	199	44	40,766
(4) Rangpur Training School	61	5	11,711
(5) Chittagong Training School ...	84	12	12,497
(6) Dacca Training School	123	13	20,964
Total ...	467	74	85,938

The figures speak for themselves. At a total cost of Rs. 85,938 we have secured only 74 trained teachers. The average cost of training per trained teacher was Rs. 1,160 in round figures. The results are not commensurate with the outlay.

Guru-training schools.

17. The total number of guru-training schools was 117—78 in Western Bengal and the rest in Eastern Bengal. Of 117 schools, 6 were exclusively reserved for the training of mianjis or maktab teachers: 3 in the Presidency, 2 in the Burdwan, and 1 in the Chittagong Divisions. On the 31st of March 1914 there were 1,820 gurus under training in these institutions. The number of gurus who passed successfully from these schools was 657. A scheme has been drawn up on the lines of the Eastern Bengal scheme of 1908 for placing these schools on an improved footing. In Eastern Bengal, several schools of this new type have been built; and it is hoped with Imperial revenues to extend the improved schools throughout the Presidency.

General remarks.

48. The question of the training of teachers is still a serious one. For all grades of English and vernacular schools the supply of trained men is altogether inadequate, and it is certainly open to question whether the training imparted is on sound lines. To remedy this state of affairs large grants for capital and recurring charges will be required, and the provision of these must of necessity cover a long period of time. The provision of an adequate supply of trained teachers is just as serious a problem as the abolition of illiteracy. In the year under review some progress may happily be recorded in (1) the improvement of the superior staff of the secondary training colleges; (2) in the overhauling of the system of vernacular training preparatory to its improvement; and (3) in the promised provision of funds to improve the salaries of training instructors and of trained teachers.

CHAPTER VII.

Professional and Technical Education.

Law colleges and classes.

49. The number of law colleges and classes remained the same as in the year before, but their attendance increased from 1,712 to 2,043. Of these, 1,905 were Hindus and 131 were Muhammadans, while the rest belonged to other races. The total direct expenditure on all the institutions amounted, during the year, to Rs. 1,84,363, of which Rs. 39,468 was met from Provincial revenues. At the B.L. final examination 524 candidates appeared and 316 passed.

Pleaders' Surv Examination.

50. During the year under review there were 10 students in the short training class at Sibpur, 8 at Dacca, and 11 at Bankipur. At the examination held in February 1914, 8 passed out of 38. The examination board decided to address Government, expressing dissatisfaction with the present scheme of training, and suggesting that the work should be entrusted to some other agency.

Civil Engineering College, Sibpur.

51. In the engineering department the total number of students was 103 as against 97 and 95 in the two preceding years. Thirty-two students were admitted during the year under review. An analysis shows that for the last two years the average age of students on completing the course (including a year's practical training) has been 26·1. The total admissions to the apprentice department numbered 68. Of the 179 students attending this department, 144 were Hindus, 2 Muhammadans, and 33 Christians. In the electrical engineering branch there were 27 students, of whom 15 were admitted to the recently-sanctioned special 3-year course. The new professor of mechanical engineering, Mr. C. A. King, arrived on 29th March 1914. The session of the mining branch opened with 12 students, namely, 7 in the 3rd-year class and 5 in the 4th-year. At the Colliery Manager's Certificate examinations this year 2 old students obtained 1st-class and 3, 2nd-class certificates, all on first trial. In the workshops, the value of the work turned out amounted to nearly Rs. 30,000, including Rs. 13,000 for furniture for the hostel and Rs. 2,850 for gun-racks for the Police Department. It is noteworthy and regrettable that no orders of any kind were received from the Bengal Public Works Department. The industrial classes for training young artisans had an average attendance of 33, of whom about 20 were in the fitting and machine shops. Five artisans left during the year, and drew Rs. 1,005 standing to their credit on account of work done, an average of about Rs. 200 each. The chemical department was in charge of the professor of tinctorial chemistry; the new professor of chemistry is not expected from England before November 1914. The mathematical and physical departments have now been placed under a single head, and Mr. A Macdonald, recently transferred from the Dacca College, was in charge of them. In the department of tinctorial chemistry there have been 5 regular students, 2 in the 1st-year and 3 in the 2nd-year class. Three others joined as occasional students, one of whom was sent by the manager of the Muir Mills, Cawnpore. Three M Sc. students also have been working in the laboratory. Four students appeared for the college Diploma examination in dyeing, and all were successful. The 3-year period for which these classes were originally sanctioned expired in November 1913. An application for their continuance has been submitted to Government, before whom it still is; meanwhile the classes are being maintained provisionally. The total expenditure on the college was 2·67 lakhs, of which 2·06 lakhs came from public revenues.

Dacca School of Engineering.

52. The 1st-year survey class was abolished from the beginning of the session The work will be undertaken in the new survey school at Comilla. The electrical power house which was attached to the school has been closed, and the foreman in charge of it has been transferred. There were 19 new admissions to the 1st-year sub-overseer class, 21 to the 2nd-year class, and 15 to the 3rd-year class. The total attendance in the sub-overseer classes was 79. The new electrical department was started in July 1913, and 4 students began the overseer course in mechanical and electrical engineering. The total market value of work turned out from the workshops was about Rs. 2,600, of which Rs. 1,530 was for outside work and the remainder for the school. There were 30 pupils in the artisan classes, of whom 14 were in the fitting shop.

Serampore Weaving Institute.

53. The session opened with 37 students in the higher classes and 55 in the artisan class. At present 52 students reside in the hostels attached to the institute. All the 31 higher class students, who passed out in the three years—1910 to 1912,—are employed on pay ranging from Rs. 35 to Rs. 200 per mensem. Of these, 11 are engaged as teachers and 12 in handloom factories. There are schools for artisan weavers at Bankura (16 students) and Cox's Bazar (14 students). The total annual cost to Government of the institute and these two schools amounted, during the year under review, to about Rs. 32,300, of which about Rs. 30,000 was for the institute. A new building is being erected for the Bankura school.

Commercial Institute, Calcutta.

54. There has been an improvement in the standard of admission, many candidates having passed the University Matriculation. The number of pupils, who joined the school during the year, was 37 in the 1st-year class and 20 in the 2nd-year. In the evening classes there were altogether 123, but only 20 of these were divided among the advanced subjects, the remaining 103 taking shorthand, typewriting, or junior book-keeping. At the final examination in the day course 12 appeared, but only 4 passed. The day class hours now extend from 11 A.M. to 4 P.M. The net cost of the institute to Government for the year was about Rs. 19,000. The question of altering the conditions of admission to the examinations is being considered.

School of Art, Calcutta.

55. There were 262 students on the roll on 31st March 1914, as against 273 in the previous year; of these students, 18 were studying lithography and 7 wood-engraving. In the hostel there were 32 boarders. The works of some 9 or 10 old students of the fine art department have been given a prominent position in exhibitions of oriental painting in Paris and London, and have been favourably mentioned. During the year 48 passed students obtained suitable employment on an average pay of Rs. 36-8 monthly.

Joint Technical Examination Board.

56. A 3-year Overseer course in mechanical and electrical engineering has been sanctioned by Government at Sibpur College. At the Overseer examination 63 candidates passed out of 109 (excluding absentees), or 57·8 per cent.;

and at the Sub-Overseer examination 123 passed out of 194, or 63·4 per cent. In 1913, these percentages were, respectively, 74·3 and 56·1. The expenditure on the examinations for 1914 (excluding establishment charges) will be more than met by the fee receipts, amounting to Rs. 8,220. All the figures in this paragraph include the statistics of candidates from Bihar and Orissa.

Mining instruction in the coalfields.

57. During the year under review the Mining Educational Advisory Board controlled the three centres at Charanpur, Deshergarh, and Raniganj, besides the two centres at Jheria and Sijua, which are in the Province of Bihar and Orissa. Out of 83 students eligible for the sessional examination from five centres, only 40 actually appeared, of whom 17 passed (9 Europeans and 8 Indians). A further grant of Rs. 2,000 was allotted from the Imperial grant for the purchase of apparatus for the lectures.

Committee on mining education.

58. In Resolution No. 2485T.—G., dated 27th October 1913, a committee was appointed by Government to advise on the scope and location of a school of mines to meet the requirements of the two Provinces of Bengal and Bihar and Orissa. The committee was asked to draw up a scheme for its establishment and maintenance, and to consider how the existing system of evening classes might be developed and made more useful, and to discuss generally the whole problem of mining education in the coalfields and the best method of supervising both the school and other forms of instruction. The committee met under the presidency of Sir D. J. Macpherson, C.I.E., and their report is now before Government.

City and Guilds of London Institute Technological examinations.

59. The examinations in April and May 1914 were held locally at two centres: Serampore for textile subjects (48 candidates), and Calcutta for engineering subjects (22 candidates). Twenty-four candidates passed in textile subjects and seven in engineering subjects.

B Classes.

60. At the school final examination of B classes held in 1913, 67 candidates appeared and 41 candidates passed. These figures include candidates from Bihar and Orissa.

Imperial grants.

61. From the recurring grant of Rs. 34,000, Rs. 10,920 was assigned to items of a recurring nature and Rs. 20,080 to non-recurring items. From the recurring grant of Rs. 37,000, Rs. 1,800 was allotted to the Indian Museum, and the balance carried forward. Of the non-recurring grant of Rs. 1,00,000, Rs. 28,050 was allotted.

CHAPTER VIII.

The Education of Indian Girls and Women.

General statistic

62. The number of public institutions of all classes for girls increased from 7,263 to 7,573, and the number of girls and women, including those reading in mixed schools, from 222,749 to 230,729, or by 7,980. The increase in the number of schools occurred under the heads of secondary, primary, and special schools. Secondary schools increased from 54 to 60; primary from 6,779 to 7,031; and special from 427 to 477. It is satisfactory to note that the number of Muhammadan girls increased during the year under review by 6,013 as against 1,423 in the preceding year. The increase of 7,980 in the total number of girls attending schools of all kinds was due chiefly to the increase in the number of Muhammadan girls. On the 31st March 1914 there were 129,518 Hindu girls and women as against 127,924 of the previous year.

Controlling agency.

63. Advantage has been taken of the imperial allotment for female education to create five additional assistant inspectress-ships for the Presidency. The inspecting agency for girls' schools now includes two inspectresses and ten assistant inspectresses. Both Miss Brock and Miss Garrett rejoined their posts during the year under review.

Collegiate education

64. The Bethune College still occupies the same building as the Collegiate School, and the question of provision of better class-room and hostel accommodation is engaging the attention of the Department. Steps are being taken to reorganize the college and to place it on an improved footing. The highest number of students on the rolls of the college during the year was 65 as against 58 of the previous year. Of these, 56 were Brahmos, 3 Hindus, and 6 Christians.

Secondary education.

65. There are 14 high schools for girls in the Presidency of Bengal. Of these, 4 are under direct Government management; 3 are under Brahmo management; and the rest are under misson control. With the exception of the Gardiner's Memorial School, all the other non-Government schools receive aid from the Department. The question of providing increased grants-in-aid to the high schools of Calcutta has been carefully considered by the Department. The schools under misson control have two or three well-qualified European teachers on their staff; and a large number of the Indian teachers therein employed have undergone some course of training. The Brahmo schools are at a disadvantage in both these respects. The mission schools continue to maintain a high level of work. On the whole, Miss Brock reports that the girls' schools in Western Bengal have been working satisfactorily. Seventy-five candidates sat for the Matriculation examination in March 1914, of whom 61 passed.

66. Miss Brock states that she does not consider the Matriculation examination to be of real value in girls' schools. The work of education, she complains with justice, is subordinated to the idea of a "pass", and the social and domestic aspects of school work are neglected.

67. There are 46 middle schools in the Presidency, of which 12 are middle English schools and the rest middle vernacular. Of these, the schools at Comilla, Noakhali, and Faridpur and the practising school attached to the Hindu Widows' Training School at Ballygunge are Government schools. In Western Bengal, the middle schools under mission management show improvement; while in the case of schools under Hindu and Brahmo management, increased grants-in-aid, recently sanctioned out of the Imperial allotment, will, it is hoped, place them on an efficient footing. In Calcutta, where there are no less than 17 middle schools, steps have been taken to provide both equipment and recurring grants. During the year under review consideration has been given to the problem of establishing good middle schools for girls at central district head-quarters. Miss Brock is of opinion that improved buildings and the appointment of mistresses instead of pandits when these ladies are available will make progress certain.

Primary education.

68. We have the following classes of special primary schools for girls in the Presidency :—

In Eastern Bengal.

(1) Urban schools of the primary status at subdivisional head-quarters and other small towns.—These schools receive grants-in-aid direct from the Department. With the help of the Imperial allotment it has been possible to increase the number of urban schools. There are now 20 in Eastern Bengal.

(2) Dacca town girls' schools.—There are 17 primary girls' schools in Dacca town with about 700 pupils. The Government grant of Rs. 250, a contribution to the municipality for the maintenance of these schools in a state of efficiency, has recently been supplemented by a further recurring grant of Rs. 80 to provide for additional staff.

(3) Panchayati union girls' schools.—Provision has been made for starting, as an experimental measure, some 20 such schools in the districts of Dacca, Tippera and Noakhali, and funds have been transferred to the boards concerned for the construction of the necessary buildings.

(4) In addition to these schools there are about 70 primary schools receiving aid from the inspectors' allotments in Eastern Bengal.

In Western Bengal.

(1) Model girls' schools.—The number of these schools remains the same as in the last year. The school buildings continue to be unsatisfactory. The question of providing these schools with better buildings is engaging the attention of the Department. The work of the model schools is reported by Miss Brock to be satisfactory : and the possibility of securing trained mistresses from the Hindu Widows' Training School at Ballygunge should, Miss Brock considers, be encouraged by the building of quarters.

(2) The peasant girls' schools scheme—Still confined to the Presidency Division—includes 22 schools, and costs Government a sum of Rs. 3,432 per year.

(3) Selected primary girls' schools—Include a large number of primary schools receiving Departmental grant-in-aid. Last year the Department was able to increase their number with the aid of Imperial funds.

Primary schools for girls may be divided into two classes : those under a definite scheme of Departmental grant-in-aid and others. The great majority of girls' schools have not yet been brought within any comprehensive or definite scheme of improvement. The reorganization of schools under District Boards and Municipalities and the appointment to these of women teachers are measures which cannot be carried out in a day.

Zanana education.

69. Zanana teaching is carried on departmentally by the system of central gatherings and of house-to-house visitation. The latter is popular in Western Bengal, and there are now 18 old and 10 new peripatetic zanana teachers at work in the Presidency and Burdwan Divisions. In Eastern Bengal, the central gathering system is more successful. Two new governesses were appointed at the beginning of the year at Mymensingh and Faridpur. The scheme in connexion with the appointment of two other governesses for Pabna and Rangpur and one for Dacca for the teaching of English has not yet received sanction. Zanana education in both parts of the Province is also carried on by missionaries. Thus in Eastern Bengal, in addition to 12 zanana governesses in Government employ, there are 20 governesses working under various missions. In all there are 40 officers of Government employed exclusively in this work under the two inspectresses ; and the women under instruction are in round numbers 1,200. Both inspectresses report that the zanana work is full of promise for the future.

Muhammadan education.

70. Special grants-in-aid have been sanctioned in favour of Mrs. Sahrawardy's School in Calcutta, the Midnapore Pardanashin Moslem Girls' School, and the Asansol School. Adequate provision has also been made in favour of the Sakhawat Memorial Girls' School and the Calcutta Orphanage. In Eastern Bengal, also, there are 7 special schools receiving grants-in-aid. The question of establishing a large number of special primary schools for Muhammadans on the lines of the urban or model primary school scheme is under the consideration of the Department. The total number of Muhammadan girls under instruction was 93,912, as compared with 129,518 Hindus. Miss Brock reports that the improvement in the conditions of Muhammadan schools and the interest which the community have begun to take in the education of their girls are amongst the most encouraging features of the work of the year 1913-14.

Training of teachers.

71. With the exception of the Government classes at Calcutta and Dacca, all training is in the hands of missionaries. There are five mission training classes. With few exceptions these schools prepare candidates for the Junior and Senior Teachership Certificate examinations, conducted by the Inspectress of Schools. Eighteen girls passed successfully the Senior examination, while seventeen passed the Junior examination. It has to be noted, however, that mission centres trained teachers almost solely for their own mission schools. During the period under review there were 71 students in the five mission training centres and 49 students in the Government classes at Calcutta and Dacca.

72. The continuation of the Hindu Widows' Training Class on the present improved basis has been sanctioned by Government for another period of two years. In the Eden High School training classes there is a small section for English training. The students—in all 32—are drawn from various communities, 15 being Christians.

73. A scheme for a women's secondary training college for the Presidency has now been definitely formulated and is now before Government. Pending the establishment of the new training college, a grant of Rs. 600 a month has been sanctioned in favour of the Diocesan College for the training of secondary school teachers in Calcutta.

74. A new scheme for the training of the pandits for Calcutta girls' schools was started during the year 1913-14. All untrained pandits of girls' schools in Calcutta are required once a week to attend the Women's United Missionary Training College, Ballygunge, where qualified teachers deliver lectures and impart instruction in kindergarten methods.

Scholarships.

75. In the year under review a sum of Rs. 23,472 has been set aside for scholarships. and a sum of Rs. 12,516 for stipends These figures represent a considerable increase upon the amounts available in the preceding year.

In consultation with both inspectresses a revised and extended system of scholarships and stipends was worked out in the year under review. This scheme has been placed before Government for consideration.

Imperial allotments for the education of girls.

76. The amount annually available is Rs. 2,44,000 made up of two successive recurring grants of Rs. 1,07,000 and of Rs. 30.000. Of this amount, a sum of Rs. 5,000 has to be annually reserved to be distributed to girls' schools at Her Excellency's discretion. We have therefore a sum of Rs. 2,39,000. A scheme for the distribution of this amount has been prepared and submitted to Government. The Imperial recurring allotment for 1912-13 was reserved for capital purposes and was apportioned to large building schemes. Up to date only part of this money has been disbursed. In the year 1913-14 Government orders were received on the distribution of the recurring grant of Rs. 1,17,499. It is unnecessary to specify in detail each head of this expenditure. Liberal grants-in-aid were arranged; scholarships were increased; training facilities were improved; and the staff of women inspecting officers was increased. Orders sanctioning the new grant were received in September 1913, and in the year now under review about half a lakh was actually disbursed.

77. The Imperial non-recurring grant for girls' schools was announced as Rs. 4,00,000. The amount available for capital expenditure during the year 1913-14 was Rs. 6,02,000: that is, the capital grant with the added sums unexpended from the recurring allotments. It will be sufficient to state that this money has been set aside for various building operations connected with girls' schools throughoht the Presidency, for grants to deserving missions, and for much-needed equipment.

78. Some reference may be made here to a scheme which has been submitted to Government in response to a communication from the Government of India on the subject of the amelioration of the conditions of service in the case of schoolmistresses and women members of the inspecting staff serving under the Education Department. This scheme provides ample concessions in the shape of free quarters, improved facilities for travelling, conveyance allowances, etc., for all classes of women officers.

General remarks.

79. Generally the year 1913-14 has been one of progress. Schemes were in many cases ready when the generous grants from the Government of India were announced. The increase of the inspecting agency, the provision of grants for improved training, additional scholarships, the opportunity afforded for the improvement of girls' schools at head-quarters, and the initiation of a scheme for model primary schools for girls in panchayati unions in Eastern Bengal are sufficient evidence of the vitality of the present system of education for girls and of the fact that the grants given up to date have been adequately appreciated.

CHAPTER IX.

The Education of Europeans.

Institutions.

80. On the 31st of March 1914 there were 76 European schools working in accordance with the Code of Regulations. Fifty-eight of these were institutions for general instruction, and 18 were technical, industrial, and training schools. One school—St. Patrick's, Asansol—was promoted from the secondary to the higher secondary grade. Its formal acceptance by the Cambridge Local Examinations Syndicate as an institution permitted to enter candidates for senior school-leaving certificate is awaited.

Pupils.

81. The total number of scholars in attendance on the 31st of March 1914 was 9,454, as compared with 9,087 on the 31st March 1913. The total number of European and Eurasian pupils was 8,766, of whom 4,318 were boys and 4,448 girls. The number in 1912-13 was 8,360. The number of non-European children was 688 as against 727 in the previous year.

Expenditure.

82. The sum total of expenditure for the year under review was Rs. 25,26,238, as compared with Rs. 23,19,001 in 1912-13. It was derived from the following sources: Provincial revenues Rs. 9,03,218; Municipal grants Rs. 14,929; fees Rs. 8,69,737; subscriptions, donations, endowments, etc., Rs. 7,38,354. The ratio of direct expenditure to indirect was approximately 2 to 3.

83. The Imperial recurring grants of Rs. 40,000, Rs. 50,000, and Rs. 60,000 were distributed in the form of staff grants. The first was reserved for the free schools and orphanages in Calcutta. The second and the third were used to assist the elementary and the higher elementary schools, other than the Calcutta free schools, and a selected minority of the secondary schools. A sum of some Rs. 20,000 out of these allotments was spent upon extraneous objects, viz., the augmentation of the boarding allotments of the Government schools at Kurseong, and the payment of the arrears of a grant to La Martinière, Calcutta. These payments were exceptional and will not be repeated.

84 The Imperial non-recurring grant of 5 lakhs was allotted in the form of building and equipment grants to 19 schools. Less than a third of the allotment was actually distributed before the close of the financial year 1913-14. The grants are being paid by instalments as the work of building proceeds, and it is anticipated that the whole sum of 5 lakhs will have been paid out before the 31st March 1915.

Teachers.

85. There were 505 teachers employed in European schools on the 31st of March 1914. The general standard of the teaching is still too low. Many of the schools are making laudable efforts to improve their staffs, and the distribution of the Imperial recurring grants in the form of staff grants has enabled the schools that received assistance from these allotments to offer higher salaries. The supply of good teachers, particularly good masters, is very limited. The improvement of the prospects of the profession is the key to the problem of the improvement of the schools. A step in the direction of its solution has been taken by the gift of staff grants, but much remains to be done. A scale of minimum salaries should be drawn up, and its acceptance by recognized schools made compulsory. Provident funds should also be instituted. A condition of the execution of these improvements is the augmentation of the resources at the disposal of the Department.

Training of teachers.

86. There is only one recognized institution for the training of teachers in Bengal, viz., the training class for women attached to the Dow Hill School, Kurseong. There were 19 students in residence during the year. The annual examination held by the Inspector and the Inspectress in November 1913 was most unsatisfactory in its results. Of the 13 candidates for the certificate only 4 passed, and the work of the junior students, though better, was far from good. A scheme for the reorganization of the class will shortly be laid before Government.

There was no training class for men in the Presidency, but the Government of Bengal is prepared to assist prospective teachers to proceed to Sanawar. Few candidates, however, present themselves from this Presidency

Manual instruction.

87. Under the orders of Government a class in manual training (wood-work) for teachers of European schools was held at the Göethal's Memorial Orphanage, Kurseong, under the supervision of Mr. A. C. Atkinson of La Martinière College, Calcutta. The class was attended by 18 teachers from various European schools, and all were reported by Mr. Atkinson to have made good progress.

Supplemetary classes.

88. As a result of the conference on elementary education held in October 1913, a sub-committee met in December and January to consider the working of the supplementary courses, and decided that what was required was the improvement of the courses, not an addition to their number. The courses have accordingly been revised and defined; they should prove satisfactory, if they are taken up seriously and sincerely by the schools. Eleven schools have supplementary classes. The largest of these classes are those attached to the Young Women's Christian Association, with 835 students on the 31st of March 1914, as compared with 775 of the preceding year. The subjects taught were shorthand, typewriting, physical culture, millinery, home-nursing, Hindustani, dress-making, cookery and first aid: the staff consists of three mistresses. The sub-overseer classes at Victoria School, Kurseong, and Göethal's Memorial Orphanage had 6 and 12 students, respectively, on 31st March 1914. The total cost of the former class was Rs. 6,580, Rs. 1,020 being received from fees. The Apprentices' Night School, Kharagpur, had 49 pupils on 31st March 1914; and the Calcutta Technical School, an evening school, which makes use of the buildings of St. Joseph's Free School, Bow Bazar, 66 pupils.

Elementary education.

89. A conference of some 40 representatives of schools and educational organizations met in October 1913 under the presidency of the Director of Public Instruction to consider the improvement of the existing system of elementary education. The subject was fully discussed, and the conference favoured a more elastic system than the existing with, as corollaries, an in-situ examination in place of the Elementary Certificate examination, the transfer of promising children to secondary schools at the age of 12, and the improvement of the supplementary courses. Subsequent reference to the schools showed that they were less anxious for change, the general opinion being that the present curriculum and examination were satisfactory, nor did they respond eagerly to a request for the names of pupils who might profit by transfer to secondary schools.

CHAPTER X.

The Education of Muhammadans.

Statistics of Muhammadan pupils.

90. The Muhammadan population of Bengal amounts, according to the last census, to 23,989,719, i.e., 52·7 per cent. of the total population; and the proportion of Muhammadan pupils to the total number of pupils in institutions of all kinds for the education of Indians is 43·4 per cent. as against 42·8 per cent. last year. The progress made by Muhammadans is very slight, and shows that the rate of increase of the Muhammadans in educational institutions is not much greater than that of the Hindus. In fact, although the number of Muhammadans in arts colleges and in secondary schools has increased, the percentage of Muhammadans in arts and professional colleges remains practically the same, and the percentage of pupils in secondary schools is only ·4 per cent. higher than last year. In primary schools the number of Muhammadans has increased, whereas the number of Hindus has diminished. It could not be expected that the rate of increase in the case of Muhammadans would continue for an indefinite period to be more rapid than the rate of increase in the case of Hindus. One would naturally expect that the Muhammadan rate of increase would tend to become less as the number of Muhammadans in general institutions became larger. An examination of figures shows, however, that the percentage of Muhammadans in colleges is only 7·2; in the high stage 14·7; in the middle stage 25·0; in the primary stage 42·6. There is therefore good ground for expecting that the number of Muhammadans under instruction in public institutions should increase more rapidly than the number of Hindus.

Muhammadan pupils and technical instruction.

91. The number of Muhammadan students in technical and industrial schools is small. It is well known that Muhammadans are widely employed in the lower ranks of engineering as engine tindals and otherwise on account of their mechanical ability, and it might be expected that they would eagerly take advantage of existing opportunities for obtaining technical and industrial education. The question whether industrial or technical education would really benefit the Muhammadans, and if so, why they do not take advantage of the facilities already provided, is receiving attention.

Need for more scholarships.

92. The demand for scholarships for Muhammadan boys who are students of university colleges and high schools is great. A scheme for increasing the facilities in this respect is now before Government.

Madrasas.

93. During the year the number of madrasas rose from 160 to 172 with an increase in the number of pupils from 13,155 to 13,863. Several important changes have been made in the rules for the madrasa examinations, e.g., the rules for the title examinations have been modified and have been made similar to the rules of the Sanskrit title examinations and the madrasa examinations have been reduced to two, namely, the Lower Standard and the Higher Standard. Students are not allowed to study for the Higher Standard examination until they have passed the Lower Standard examination. There is at present under the consideration of this office a set of such transfer rules for application to madrasas as are observed in all other educational institutions. Since the close of the year under review Government has adopted and published a scheme for the reform of madrasas in accordance with the recommendations of the Dacca University Committee The Calcutta Madrasa will be excluded from this scheme, and an independent scheme for the development of this institution is being considered.

Maktabs.

94. As pointed out in the last Annual Report, the system of maktab education in Eastern Bengal differs from that in vogue in Western Bengal; but there is under the consideration of the Department a scheme for the unification of these two systems. During the year under review progress has been made in the introduction of Sir A. Earle's scheme of model maktabs, mianji-training schools, and inspecting maulvis in the Burdwan and Presidency Divisions, and the question of giving an increased grant-in-aid to maktabs in board areas and of extending the system of increased grants to the Eastern Bengal districts has been taken up. District Officers have been addressed, and replies are now being received.

Meetings and conferences.

95. Various meetings and conferences of the different Moslem Leagues and Anjumans have been held during the year under review. Copies of the resolutions passed at these meetings have been sent to the Director of Public Instruction, Bengal, and many of these resolutions concerning educational matters are now being considered in the office of the Assistant Director of Public Instruction for Muhammadan Education.

CHAPTER XI.

The Education of Special Classes.

Education of chiefs and nobles.

96. The only institution of this class in the Province is the Nawab Bahadur's Institution at Murshidabad, where special arrangements are made for the boys of the Nizamat family, of whom 26 were in residence during the year under review. The school, which is under the control of an English head master, is in its general organization a high English school, and the Nizamat pupils form only a small proportion of its pupils.

Education of aborigines and other backward races.

97. These are mainly the Garos, the Kochs, and the Mandais of the Dacca and Mymensingh districts, the Tipras and the Chakmas, etc., of the Tippera and Chittagong Hill Tracts, the Maghs of the Chittagong Hill Tracts, the Cox's Bazar subdivision of the Chittagong district, and the Sundarbans, the Sonthals of Bankura, Birbhum and Midnapore. During the year there was a slight increase in the number of pupils belonging to these classes. A scheme for the expansion of education among the Sonthals is under consideration. Sonthal pupils gained a number of primary and middle scholarships. The Seranga Mission has a training school for Sonthal teachers, who, are employed mainly in the mission schools. The number of Magh pupils in the Sundarbans has appreciably increased, and new schools have been started in certain settlements. The Magh centres in the Cox's Bazar subdivision have been, with few exceptions, provided with Burmese primary schools, and a middle English school is being established at Ramu in the same subdivision, while a proposal to open a normal school for the training of Magh teachers is under consideration. In the Chittagong Hill Tracts there are over 100 public schools for Maghs, Chakmas, Tipras and other hill tribes : among these there are one high English school, one middle vernacular school, and a special training class for teachers.

Education of the defective.

98. The schools for the deaf and dumb at Calcutta and Barisal are the most important institutions for the physically defective. At the end of the year they had 63 and 16 pupils respectively. Of the total cost of maintenance of the former, Rs. 3,000 came from Provincial revenues, Rs. 2,400 from Municipal funds. and Rs. 11,406 from other sources. The cost of the school for the year under review for the blind in Calcutta was Rs. 8.967, towards which Provincial revenues contributed Rs. 1.800 and Municipal Rs. 1,500.

Education of the indigent.

99. The chief institutions are St. Anthony's School, St. Saviour's Parish School, the Refuge and the Hindu and Muhammadan Orphanages at Calcutta, and the Dacca Orphanage. Their work deserves wider recognition than it receives.

Education of children in tea gardens.

100. Schools for these children exist only in the Darjeeling and Jalpaiguri districts : an attempt to introduce them into the Chittagong district failed owing chiefly to the apathy of garden managers. In the Jalpaiguri district the planters have taken upon themselves the management of most of the schools situated within garden areas.

Education of factory children.

101. A survey has been made by an officer of the Education Department as preliminary to the framing of a scheme for the primary education of the children of labourers in the mills along the Hooghly.

CHAPTER XII.

Private Institutions.

102. The number of these institutions rose during the year under review from 2,217 to 2,267, and the number of pupils from 55,858 to 59,861. Of these, 42,946 were Muhammadans, 15,262 Hindus, and the rest belonged to other races. The number of girl pupils was 9,856. The increase of numbers is mainly confined to the Chittagong Division, where 92 new Korân schools sprang up during the year. In Calcutta, there is also an increase of 6 Korân and 7 other schools. In other divisions there has been a general decrease, due partly to the disappearance of some of the Korân schools and partly to the adoption of the departmental curriculum by these and other private schools.

CHAPTER XIII.

Physical and Moral Training.

Hostels

103. The total number of hostels and boarding-houses increased from 586 to 634, and the number of inmates from 18,858 to 21,073. Of hostels, 567 were for males and 67 for females, accommodating 17,111 and 3,962 boarders respectively, as compared with 15,018 and 3,840 of the preceding year. The total expenditure incurred amounted to Rs. 19.64,084 as against Rs. 16,98,500 of the preceding year. Of this, Rs. 3,35,524 was met from Provincial revenues; Rs. 3,281 from District and Municipal funds; and Rs. 16,25,279 from fees and other sources as against Rs. 2,93,578 ; Rs. 2,121 ; and Rs. 14,02,801, respectively, for the preceding year.

104. During the year Imperial grants amounting to Rs. 25,81,140 were available for expenditure on hostels. The grants were—

(a) the unspent balance of the Imperial grants of 1911-12 amounting to Rs. 5,16,018 ;

(b) the unspent balance of the Imperial grants of 1912-13 amounting to Rs. 13,83,122 ;

(c) the recurring Durbar grant of Rs. 1,32,000 ; and

(d) the new non-recurring grant of Rs. 5,50,000 (part of the grant of Rs. 20,50,000 for the construction of hostels in the Presidency of Bengal and to provide for the Dacca hostel scheme).

Of the balance of the Imperial grants for 1911-12 and 1912-13, a sum of Rs. 92,753 was spent on hostels for Calcutta colleges and Rs. 55,114 on hostels for mufassal colleges, while Rs. 1,35,353 was spent on other hostels. As in the preceding year, the major portion of the recurring Durbar grant of Rs. 1,32,000 was set apart for expenditure on non-recurring projects. It is, however, noted that towards the middle of the year under review Government sanctioned certain proposals in connexion with the utilization of this grant for recurring purposes in future years. Out of the new non-recurring grant of 5½ lakhs, a sum of Rs. 2.40,251 was sanctioned, and Rs. [illegible]7,749 was utilized during the year.

Messes.

105. Some arrangements are made both in Calcutta and in Dacca for the accommodation of students who cannot be accommodated in hostels : elsewhere there is little if any system. The control of messes in Calcutta is vested in the Calcutta University, and at Dacca in the "Dacca City Educational Council."

Physical training

106. The most important feature of the year was the appointment of a small committee of experts, medical and educational, to conduct a thorough inquiry into the hygienic conditions of schools and colleges in connexion with a non-recurring grant of Rs. 3,50,000 from Imperial sources. The recommendations of the committee are not yet complete.

107. A grant of Rs. 2,760 a year is given to the Young Men's Christian Association towards the salary of the Physical Director, whose services are partly utilized by the Education Department for the instruction of class teachers and drill masters, and who acts as the expert adviser of the Department in such matters. The arrangement, which was sanctioned as a temporary measure, has justified itself, and the grant has been increased.

108. A suggestion has also been made by the Young Women's Christian Association for assistance towards recruiting a qualified instructress of physical education, whose services might be partly utilized by the Education Department for promoting physical training in girls' schools.

109. Physical culture continued to receive considerable attention. Football and cricket are popular in colleges and secondary schools ; country games in primary schools. Drill as a part of the school course is regularly taught in the majority of schools for boys, and gymnastic exercises are also practised to some extent ; but in spite of all these and of rowing and swimming, which receive some attention in certain localities, much remains to be done.

Moral training.

110. The deliberations of the conference held in December 1912 to discuss religious and moral training are still under the consideration of Government. At present nothing systematic is attempted in this direction except in maktabs, madrasas, and certain other special schools.

Discipline.

111. The beginning of the year under review was somewhat disquieting, a large number of students having been implicated in conspiracy cases ; but the situation improved steadily. There are abundant signs that parents and guardians generally detest the attempts which are made from time to time to seduce their boys into sedition and anarchy ; but it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that the general situation would be a good deal better, if their indignation took a little more aggressive form. Surely if public opinion was sufficiently strong, the propagation of sedition and anarchy among schoolboys would become ineffective, if not impossible.

CHAPTER XIV.

Conferences.

112. During the year under review two important conferences were held under the presidency of the Director of Public Instruction—one (in February 1914) to consider the question of the establishment of a secondary training college for women in Calcutta, and the other (in October 1913) to discuss the suitability of the education given in elementary schools for Europeans. Another conference was held in November 1913 under the presidency of Sir D. J. Macpherson, C.I.E., to advise Government on the scope and location of a school of mines to meet the requirements of the two Provinces of Bengal and Bihar and Orissa.

113. As in previous years, conferences were held by the higher inspecting officers of the several divisions. The subjects discussed in these conferences included the improvement of primary schools, the distribution of primary grants, the administration of board schools, etc. Conferences were also held by almost all the deputy inspectors of schools, in which various questions of local interest were discussed.

CHAPTER XV.

Text-Book Committees.

114. Two separate text-book committees, one at Calcutta and the other at Dacca, are still maintained, and their constitution has remained unaltered. During the year 1913-14, 185 books were approved by the Calcutta committee out of 251 books circulated to the members. The Dacca committee had to report on 222 books out of 242.

RESOLUTION ON THE REPORT OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, BENGAL, FOR THE YEAR ENDING THE 30TH JUNE 1914.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

AGRICULTURE.

READ—

The Report of the Department of Agriculture, Bengal, for the year ending the 30th June 1914.

Staff.—Mr. J. R. Blackwood was in charge of the Department throughout the year. Mr. A. A. Meggitt, as Agricultural Chemist, worked both in this province and in Assam until January 1914, when his services were placed entirely at the disposal of the Assam Administration, and Mr. H. E. Annett was appointed Agricultural Chemist in Bengal. Mr. G. P. Hector held the post of Economic Botanist and Mr. F. Smith that of Deputy Director of Agriculture. Mr. R. S. Finlow was absent on leave during the year, and his work was carried on, so far as possible, by the Economic Botanist and the Agricultural Chemist jointly in addition to their own duties.

The appointment of a second Deputy Director of Agriculture for Bengal was sanctioned during the year, and the officer selected for the post is now undergoing a preliminary course of training at the Imperial Research Institute at Pusa. Since the close of the year the formation of a regular cadre for the Provincial and Subordinate Agricultural Services has been sanctioned. It is not possible at present to draw up a final scheme for the different services, but the sanctioned cadre now makes provision for immediate requirements and will be capable of expansion as the work develops. The Provincial Service consists of six posts of Agricultural Superintendents on Rs. 200—10—400, thus enabling a Superintendent to be posted to each of the five divisions, while the services of another will be available for special enquiries. The Subordinate Service has been divided into two classes, namely, class I on Rs. 100—5—200 and class II on Rs. 50—2½—100. Class I includes the Farm Superintendents and the Travelling Inspectors of the Department and class II, the District Agricultural Officers now employed in Mymensingh and Rangpur and the Mycological and Entomological Collectors. The qualification required for the Provincial Service will for the present be a training in agriculture in Europe, America or Japan, and class I of the Subordinate Service will be reserved for men holding a degree or certificate from an agricultural college in India.

2. Agricultural Education.—Eighteen students from Bengal attended the Agricultural College at Sabour in Bihar and Orissa during the year. Eleven of them obtained the College diploma on completing the course, and it is reported that most of these men have succeeded in obtaining appointments. Little use is made, except by candidates for Government employment, of the special facilities offered to students from Bengal to enter the College, but a desire is frequently expressed that provision should be made for some form of agricultural training in this Presidency. The Governor in Council has accordingly caused a scheme to be drawn up for giving a short course of practical training in scientific agriculture on the Dacca Farm, which is the most important agricultural station in the Province and is the head-quarters of the Agricultural Chemist, the Economic Botanist and the Fibre Expert. The scheme is not intended to qualify students for Government employment, but simply to provide the sons of landholders and other gentlemen with a knowledge of the elements of agricultural science and of improved methods of cultivation, which they could put to practical use in the management of their estates. The opinion of the leading landholders' associations has been invited on the general suitability of the scheme and on certain details connected with it.

The system of training apprentices on farms is being extended, and it has been decided that appointments as fieldmen demonstrators will in future be given only to persons who have undergone a systematic course of training under arrangements which have been tentatively sanctioned.

The report on the results of the "Nature Study", which forms part of the curriculum of primary schools, is again unsatisfactory, and it seems clear that, mainly owing to the lack of qualified and capable teachers, little practical good is being effected. The Governor in Council would be glad if the Director of Public Instruction would go into the whole question in consultation with the Director of Agriculture and consider what action can be taken to place matters on a better footing.

3. Research and Experiments at Agricultural Stations.—It has been decided that in future the reports of the scientific officers of the Department and of the work done at the agricultural stations will be published in a separate volume, a general summary being given in the Director's report, which deals with the work of the department as a whole. The experimental and research operations at the Dacca Farm are beginning to yield interesting results, which, it is hoped, will be of practical, as well as of scientific value. Mr. Hector, the Economic Botanist, has now studied in detail for three seasons the characters of over 200 types of transplanted aman paddy and has isolated the best for a practical test in the fields. He has also made some interesting experiments in the methods followed in Japan for separating light from heavy seed by immersion in a solution of common salt, which causes the light seed to float on the surface, while the heavy seed sinks to the bottom. This simple system of seed selection should prove useful to the Bengal raiyat, who, as the Director observes, is apt to use very bad seed and too much of it. Experimental work for the eradication of the ufra disease was continued during the cold weather of 1912-13 in certain areas in Dacca and Noakhali, where the disease had been very prevalent in the previous season, but fortunately there was no outbreak of the disease in 1913, and the results obtained were, therefore, necessarily inconclusive. The Governor in Council is glad to see that the operations are being continued in consultation with Dr. Butler of Pusa, whose valuable monograph on the subject of the ufra disease has been translated into Bengali and should be circulated as widely as possible. Mr. Finlow's work on fibres was to a great extent interrupted owing to his absence on leave, but a considerable quantity of superior jute seed, selected on the pure line culture system, is now available, and arrangements have been made to give it an extensive trial on a practical scale during the coming season. The manurial experiments, which were begun in 1911 in connection with the effects of lime and phosphates on red soil were continued on the Dacca Farm, and it appears to have been definitely established that the application of these manures creates an immediate improvement. The Governor in Council is glad to see that arrangements are being made to demonstrate the results in tracts with similar soils. Mr. Annett, the recently-appointed Agricultural Chemist, has drawn up a full and interesting programme of work, embracing an important analysis of the juices of the various varieties of sugarcane grown on the Dacca Farm, and a study of the methods employed for the extraction and manufacture of sugar from the date palm, which, it is hoped, will lead to the discovery of improvements and assist the re-establishment of the industry. Mr. Annett has also taken up the important question of a soil survey of the province, as well as investigations of the contents of manures, food-stuffs and the root nodules of leguminous plants.

On the minor farms experimental work has been carried out mainly in connection with rice and jute, but it is not clear how far the operations have been co-ordinated with those at the main agricultural station at Dacca. This matter should be borne in mind in connection with the redistribution of work, which will be necessary on the arrival of the second Deputy Director, whose head-quarters will be on the Dacca Farm.

4. The Rangpur Dairy Farm—Possession of all the land acquired for this farm was not obtained until November 1913, and it is not therefore as yet possible to come to any conclusion as to the measure of success likely to be attained by the farm in fulfilling its main function of solving the difficult problems connected with the breeding and maintenance of cattle in a highly-cultivated tract. Great difficulty has been experienced in securing suitable cows, and the number of cattle so far obtained is little more than half of that which the farm could maintain. Further experience is necessary before a definite cropping scheme can be framed, and some time must elapse before the effects on the cattle of judicious breeding and selection, combined with careful and liberal feeding, can be ascertained. So far the local demand for the milk produced on the farm greatly exceeds the supply.

5. Demonstration Work.—Good progress has been made in organising and developing the demonstration work of the Department. The reconstitution of the Provincial and Subordinate Services and the scheme for the training of demonstrators have already been described. Demonstrations in the use of bonemeal manure have been continued in various districts of Eastern Bengal and have achieved a considerable measure of success, increases of outturn, yielding a substantial net profit, having been obtained in the majority of cases. When the scheme was first started it was found necessary to invoke the assistance of the zamindars to purchase bonemeal for their raiyats, but it is now reported that the intervention of the zamindars is no longer required, as the raiyats are sufficiently convinced of the advantages of bonemeal to purchase it for themselves. In some cases co-operative societies have assisted their members to purchase bonemeal. Two societies have been formed for this purpose in Dacca, and the co-operative societies in Mymensingh and Faridpur are financing their members for the purchase of seed and manures. There seems now to be scope for a further extension of the usefulness of the co-operative agency in popularising agricultural improvements. It is of course essential that co-operative societies should not be used for the purpose of financing experiments, but once the suitability of an improvement to a particular area has been established, the societies should be able to render valuable assistance in accelerating its introduction. The Director of Agriculture should keep in close touch with the Registrar of Co-operative Societies in regard to this matter.

Among other successful demonstrations may be mentioned those in connection with superior varieties of potato, and measures for the conservation of cowdung in pits. Further efforts were made to induce the cultivators to take more trouble with the selection of their jute and paddy seed, by reserving the best plants for this purpose. It is stated that the actual selection was made in all cases in the presence, and with the advice, of the Supervisor or District Agricultural Officer, and the results obtained from the use of the seed so selected have been very favourable in nearly every case. It will be interesting to see next season how far the system has impressed the neighbouring cultivators as a feasible means of increasing their profits. It has been objected on good authority that the methods adopted are not sufficiently precise or scientific to produce any permanent improvement, and that it would be impossible to provide the necessary supervision if the system became general among the raiyats. The Governor in Council fully realises the force of these objections, but there can be no harm, and there is a possibility of much good, in teaching the raiyat that he can secure an increased outturn, with little or no extra trouble or expense to himself, by paying more attention to the selection of plants for seed, instead of taking any plants haphazard for the purpose, or even, as often happens in the case of jute, deliberately selling the best plants for fibre and reserving only the inferior ones for seed. There is nothing in the scheme to interfere with the more careful and scientific methods of seed selection followed by the scientific officers of the Department. On the contrary, if Mr. Blackwood's operations lead the raiyats to appreciate the importance of using good seed, they will be the more ready to take advantage of superior seed; when the Department is in a position to place it within their reach.

6. Sericulture.—It was mentioned in the resolution on last year's report that M. Lafont, the French Sericultural Expert, was compelled to leave India on account of illness and that another expert, M. Grangeon, who had had experience of silk work in Madagascar, had been appointed in his place. After his return to France, M. Lafont submitted a report on his work in India, which was published in the course of the year. It appears that the attempt to convert univoltine races of silk-worms into polyvoltine by acclimatisation was a failure in Bengal, although it had succeeded in Madagascar. In regard to the experiments in cross-breeding, it has been proved that, although cross-bred worms are superior in the first generation to the indigenous varieties, they rapidly deteriorate afterwards as they cannot stand the climate of Bengal, especially during the period from July to October. To get over this difficulty, M. Grangeon has proposed to keep the seed cocoons in the hills during that period, and a small nursery has been established experimentally at Kurseong. M. Grangeon has been called away for duty with the French army and his work is now being carried on by Mr. P. C. Chaudhuri. Further progress has been made with the scheme for the establishment of central nurseries from which pure seed cocoons, free from disease, will be supplied under Government supervision. The opening of nurseries in Malda and Bogra has rendered possible an important advance by enabling nurseries to obtain their seed cocoons by exchange with one another, instead of, as formerly, by purchase from village rearers.

It is satisfactory to find that a student of the Sericultural class, attached to the Berhampore Central Nursery, after having passed the final examination, has built a model nursery and has commenced rearing on scientific lines. It is hoped that the visit paid by the Superintendent of Sericulture to the Punjab, the United Provinces, Bombay and Nagpur during the year with the object of bringing purchasers of silk into direct contact with the silk-reelers of this province will produce good results.

7. Fisheries.—Mr. Southwell, the Deputy Director of Fisheries, has submitted an elaborate and interesting account of his work during the year. The main problem before the Department is to increase the fish supply of the province either by tapping new sources of supply or by improving existing sources, and this object is being kept steadily in view in the scientific investigations which form a necessary preliminary to economic work. The statistical enquiry regarding the fish trade of the province has been completed, and Mr. Southwell has worked out and published an important scheme for the introduction of trawling on commercial lines in the Bay of Bengal. A similar scheme for opening out the Sundarbans fisheries is being prepared. The investigation of the breeding conditions of hilsa has been continued, but is hampered by the want of a launch, the building of which has been delayed owing to various difficulties. Some important experimental work has been done in connection with the destruction of carp in tanks by predaceous fish, and a large quantity of fry has been supplied under special arrangements with the Railway Companies. A fishermen's co-operative society has already been started in Bakarganj, and it is hoped that additional societies will shortly be started at other places in Eastern Bengal, with the object of assisting fishermen to obtain cheaply nets, boats and other implements of their calling and to enable them to dispose of their catches at reasonable prices. Propaganda work, including instruction in such matters as the stocking of tanks, the curing and transport of fish and the care of fry, has everywhere been very successful. Mr. Southwell reports that the time is now ripe for undertaking more extensive work both of a scientific and economic nature, and the Governor in Council trusts that it will be possible by means of sound and practical schemes to effect some definite improvements in an industry which is of vital importance to the people of this Presidency.

8. The Jute Forecast.—The method of preparing the jute forecast was further considered during the year in consultation with the Jute Forecasts Committee of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. A somewhat elaborate scheme for ascertaining and recording annually the exact area under jute was drawn up at the request of the trade and published for criticism, but was eventually abandoned with the concurrence of the various sections of the trade, both on account of the heavy expenditure involved and also because of the worry and trouble which it was likely to cause to the jute cultivators. The London Jute Association expressed the view that the recent jute forecasts have been as approximately accurate as it is reasonable to expect, and the general opinion appeared to be that the present system of basing the forecast on a detailed census made by the panchayats of the jute cultivators in each union should be continued. The Governor in Council has accordingly decided to adopt this course for the present, though no effort will be spared to improve the system so far as funds and staff permit.

9. Though no striking economic success has been achieved or is in prospect, the record of the work of the Bengal Agricultural Department during the year is one of progress. The scientific operations, particularly those relating to seed selection, have now reached a stage at which they can be submitted to a practical test of their economic value, and when the recently sanctioned increase of the staff has had time to take effect, it should be possible to organise the demonstration work of the Department on sound and practical lines. The Department has no reason to complain of lack of interest or lack of criticism on the part of the public, and His Excellency in Council has no doubt that once it has been able to make its aims and objects understood by successful and practical demonstration of the results achieved, it will secure a full measure of appreciation and gratitude.

By order of the Governor in Council,

J. H. KERR,
Secy. to the Govt. of Bengal.

RESOLUTION ON THE REPORT OF THE BOARD OF REVENUE ON THE LAND REVENUE ADMINISTRATION OF THE PRESIDENCY OF BENGAL FOR THE YEAR 1913-14.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

READ—

The Report of the Board of Revenue on the Land Revenue Administration of the Presidency of Bengal for the year 1913-14.

SIR DUNCAN MACPHERSON, KT., C.I.E., held charge of the office of Member of the Board from 3rd July 1913 to the 12th January 1914, when he retired from the service and was succeeded by the Hon'ble Mr. C. J. Stevenson-Moore, C.V.O., who held charge during the rest of the year.

2. General conditions of the year.—As remarked by the Board, the year under review will be long remembered as that of the unusually high floods which occurred in the Burdwan Division, causing serious loss of human life and cattle and damage to standing crops, houses and other property. The total area affected by the floods was about 1,200 square miles, with a population approaching a million. One hundred and twenty-five persons were drowned, and it is estimated that between 5,000 and 6,000 cattle were lost. Immediate action was taken to help the people by providing shelter, medical help, grain and money, and the District Officers received much assistance in the relief measures from voluntary agencies and private persons. Agricultural loans were distributed promptly and arrangements were made for the supply of seedlings, with the result that the greater part of the area was replanted and a fairly good winter rice harvest secured. In parts of the Contai Subdivision of Midnapore, however, the water did not subside rapidly enough to enable a winter harvest to be reaped, and gratuitous relief had to be given in this area until the hot weather. Special attention was given from the outset in all districts to sanitary measures, which proved successful in preventing any outbreak of epidemic disease. Liberal suspensions of revenue were granted in the Government and temporarily-settled estates, while in the permanently-settled estates, which had been affected by the floods, the sale law was enforced with special leniency and moderation.

In May 1914 a tornado passed over portions of the district and the town of Dacca, causing damage to a number of villages, and a sum of Rs. 9,301 was spent in gratuitous relief.

Except in the areas affected by these local calamities, the condition of the cultivating classes was on the whole prosperous during the year, especially in Eastern and Northern Bengal. Very high prices were obtained for jute, and the crop was on the whole good except in the Presidency and Burdwan Divisions where it was damaged by excessive rainfall in the early part of the season. The condition of the labouring classes was generally satisfactory and the wages of agricultural labourers showed a tendency to rise, the highest rates being reported from Eastern Bengal.

3. Land Revenue demands, collections, balances and remissions.—There were 96,837 estates paying land revenue in the Presidency during the year, of which 91,604 were permanently settled, 3,072 temporarily settled and 2,161 held direct by Government. The current demand was Rs. 2,71,19,560, an increase of nearly a lakh over the previous year, due mainly to new settlements and resettlements in the Government and temporarily-settled estates. The collections amounted to Rs. 2,67,16,990 being 94·87 per cent. of the total and 98·52 per cent. of the current demands, against 96·29 per cent. and 100·03 per cent., respectively, in the previous year. The falling-off is due to short collections in the Burdwan Division in consequence of the damage caused by the floods, which necessitated the formal suspension of over two lakhs of the revenue demand.

4. Road and Public Works cesses.—The current cess demand showed an increase of Rs. 1,20,072, due chiefly to revaluation operations. The percentage of total collections on the current demand, however, fell from 101·4 to 100·2, and only 13 districts, against 19 in the previous year, attained the prescribed standard of 100 per cent. or more of the current demand.

Valuations or revaluations, partial or complete, were undertaken in 16 out of the 25 districts to which the Act applies, and were completed in 11. In Midnapore, Dacca, Faridpur and Jalpaiguri, the work is being carried out by the Settlement Department under the procedure of the Cess Act of 1880. The special procedure for making cess revaluations simultaneously with the preparation of the record-of-rights, which was inserted in the Cess Act by the Amending Act of 1910 and was introduced in the district of Midnapore, has been found defective, and the question of modifying it is under consideration. A bill to amend the Cess Act so as to give legal sanction to the arrangement under which the proceeds of the Public Works cess have been surrendered to the District Boards has been submitted for the approval of the Government of India.

5. Revenue money orders.—The system of remitting land revenue and cesses by money order is growing in public favour, and nearly 22 lakhs of revenue were paid in this manner during the year, an increase of 4½ lakhs over the preceding year. The postal authorities have approved the introduction of a combined form of money order for the remittance of both land revenue and cesses by a single transaction, and this reform should prove a convenience to revenue payers.

6. Coercive measures.—Although the number of estates which defaulted in the payment of land revenue and became liable to sale was 12,467 or nearly 2,000 in excess of the figures for the two previous years, only 811 were actually sold. The number of certificates filed, inclusive of those on cess accounts, was 97,724 as against 123,868 in the previous year. The decrease was most marked in Midnapore, Faridpur and Chittagong. In Midnapore, the decrease is due to the fact that in consequence of the damage done by floods, certificates were not filed for the realization of the rents due from the khas mahal tenants in Contai. There was a satisfactory increase of more than 5 per cent. in the number of certificate-cases disposed of, but the number of pending cases is still high in some districts, and the Governor in Council is glad to notice that the Board of Revenue is asking Commissioners to see that they are disposed of with the least possible delay. In the majority of cases, payments were made on the issue of notices or on attachment of property, and it was necessary to resort to actual sale in only 2,279 cases or 2·1 per cent. of the 107,272 cases disposed of during the year.

7. Conditions of the raiyats in Government estates and expenditure on improvements and education.—Except in the areas affected by floods, good crops were obtained in most districts, and the condition of the tenants was on the whole satisfactory. The total number of estates under direct management was 2,161 with a current demand of Rs. 39,84,881. A sum of Rs. 78,533 was spent on miscellaneous and sanitary improvements, more than half being devoted to drainage, irrigation and embankments. The expenditure on education amounted to Rs. 60,854. There are 2,379 schools attended by over 77,000 pupils in the Government estates of the Presidency. The expenditure on roads and communications in Government estates amounted to Rs. 2,05,211, of which Rs. 66,334 were paid out of the Government 1½ per cent. grant, the balance being met from local funds.

8. Advances.—The advances made during the year under the Land Improvement and Agriculturists' Loans Acts amounted to Rs. 4,07,475, of which nearly 3 lakhs were on account of loans granted in the areas affected by the floods. Further progress was made in the realization of arrears, the amount overdue having been reduced from over 1½ lakhs to less than 1¼ lakhs during the year.

9. Drainage, irrigation and embankments.—No important new drainage or irrigation projects were undertaken. The whole of the area of nearly 300 square miles drained by the Magrahât Drainage Scheme in the 24-Parganas has been brought under cultivation, and although the year was one of exceptional rainfall, the sluices worked well, and the crops did not suffer except on some low-lying lands. In connection with embankments, the main work done was to close the breaches caused by the floods in the Burdwan Division. The question of adopting remedial measures for lessening the damage by floods in the Burdwan, Hooghly, Howrah and Midnapore districts is under the consideration of the Public Works Department. A proposal has been approved by Government for raising the low portions of certain Schedule D embankments on the right bank of the Ajai river. The investigations conducted by the officers of the Public Works Department in connection with the condition of private embankments in Birbhum have been completed, and the Collector of Birbhum has been asked to initiate proceedings under the Embankment Act for the more efficient control and maintenance of the embankments.

10. Partitions.—Seventy-three cases were instituted during the year and 238 were pending at the close of the preceding year. Only 33 cases were disposed of, leaving 278 pending at the end of the year. The experiment of carrying out partitions under Act V (B.C.) of 1897 through the agency of the Settlement Department had to be abandoned, as it was found that the delays caused by the procedure of the existing partition law seriously hampered the preparation of the record-of-rights. The amendment of the Partition Act is under the consideration of the Board.

11. Sundarbans.—The rules for the grant of waste-land leases in the 24-Parganas and Khulna portions of the Sundarbans remained in abeyance

An investigation by the Public Works Department has shown that reclamation by embankments has proved seriously detrimental to this area, as it interferes with the building up of the deltaic tract by tidal action. The policy, which should now be adopted, is under consideration. In the area under colonisation in the district of Bakarganj, only 239 new colonists settled on 12,340 bighas of land against 715 colonists on 54,586 bighas in the previous year. The decrease is attributed to the fact that the first rush for land is over, and the colonisation officer devoted most of his time to the improvement and consolidation of existing settlements, and to seeing that the lands are cleared and brought under cultivation at a reasonable rate of progress. The Governor in Council is glad to see that fourteen co-operative societies have been started in the area, and trusts that they will materially benefit the colonists.

12. Working of the Bengal Tenancy Act.—Nothing noteworthy has been reported in regard to the working of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but except in areas for which a record-of-rights has been prepared, it is doubtful whether the importance of some of its main provisions is realized by the landlords and tenants. For example, the levy of abwab and other illegal exactions in addition to the rent is notoriously common throughout the Presidency, but no suit under section 75 of the Act was instituted in respect of such exactions during the year.

There was an increase in the number of rent money orders issued and in the amount covered by them. The percentage of money orders refused by landlords fell from 25·1 in the preceding year to 20·3 during the year under report. Since the close of the year a revised form of rent money order has been issued, certain modifications having been made in the existing form in order to remove the objections often made by landlords to accepting rents tendered in this manner. The form, as now revised, contains nothing which can give the tenant any loophole for making claims as to the nature, conditions or incidents of his tenancy or the amount or fixity of his rent, which might lead to disputes with the landlord or cause him to hesitate to accept the rent tendered, while the headings have been modified to facilitate the identification of the remitter and of the tenancy on account of which the rent is remitted.

In view of representations received from the High Court regarding the unsatisfactory state of the existing law relating to the transfer of occupancy holdings, a draft Bill on the subject has been prepared and circulated for public criticism.

13. Controller of Office Systems, Bengal.—The term of Mr. R. J. Watson's appointment as Controller of Office Systems, Bengal, expired during the year. He was first appointed to the post in January 1906 and during his eight years' service he inspected and reorganised several record-rooms in Bengal and introduced many reforms, as well as several simple labour-saving devices which are being worked successfully. His suggestions were always sound and practical, and have led to a considerable increase of economy and efficiency.

14. The thanks of Government are due to the Board for its capable and efficient administration of the Land Revenue Department during the year.

By order of the Governor in Council,

J. H. KERR,

Secretary to the Govt. of Bengal.

MONTHLY WEATHER AND CROP REPORT OF BENGAL FOR DECEMBER 1914.

I. Character of the season.—The rainfall during the month was in excess of the normal throughout the Province excepting in some of the North Bengal districts. The usual rainfall statement is appended.

II. Progress of agricultural operations.—Sowing of rabi crops was completed. Harvesting of winter rice was going on briskly and was nearing completion. Harvesting of sugarcane was also commenced in some districts.

III. State of standing crops.—The condition of the standing winter rice crop was generally not very satisfactory. The state of rabi crops was greatly improved by the rainfall.

IV. Prospects and probable outturn.—The prospects of the rabi crops were reported to be fairly good.

V. Damage to standing crops.—Ripe paddy was slightly damaged by rainfall. Injury by insect-pests was also reported from parts of Khulna and Bogra.

VI. Condition of agricultural stock.—Condition of agricultural stock was fair. Cattle-disease was reported from parts of Nadia, Murshidabad, Burdwan, Birbhum, Midnapore, Darjeeling, Rangpur, Pabna, Mymensingh and Chittagong Hill Tracts.

VII. Failure of pasturage and fodder.—There was no scarcity of fodder anywhere.

VIII. Prices of food-grains.—During the second fortnight of the month under review the price of common rice rose in four districts, fell in ten and remained stationary in the rest. It varied from 7 seers a rupee at Rangpur and Darjeeling to 9 seers 8 chitaks at Burdwan.

IX. Condition of agricultural people.—The condition of agricultural people was reported to be fair.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to report on the circumstances which preceded and accompanied my departure from Constantinople on the 1st November.

On my return to my post on the 16th August, a fortnight after the outbreak of the European war, the situation was already such as to give ground for the apprehension that Turkey would be driven by Germany sooner or later to take part in it as her ally. The Ottoman army, under the supreme command of Enver Pasha, who was entirely in German hands, had been mobilised, and although the Government had declared their intention of preserving their neutrality, they had taken no proper steps to ensure its maintenance. They had, on the contrary, jeopardised their ability to do so by the admission of the German warships "Goeben" and "Breslau" into the Dardanelles on the 10th August. Events have confirmed what I and my French and Russian colleagues constantly impressed upon the Grand Vizier and other Ministers at the time, that so long as the German Admiral and crews remained on board the German warships, the German Government were masters of the situation, and were in a position to force the hand of the Turkish Government if at any given moment it suited them to do so.

So far as the Grand Vizier was concerned, the warning fell upon deaf ears, and it was at no time possible to persuade His Highness to admit that he would not be able to control developments to which he was himself opposed and which had not the approval of the whole Government. It is quite possible that he was sincere in this conviction, but he was fully alive to the precarious nature of his own position and to the fact that any real attempt on his part to run counter to the policy of Enver Pasha and the military authorities would have meant his elimination. This event would have brought matters to a head at once, which would have been contrary to the policy of the allied Powers of postponing for as long as possible, if they were unable to avert altogether, the intervention of Turkey in the war, with the vast and complicated issues involved in the raising of the Eastern question, so that my rôle and that of my French and Russian colleagues, with whom I acted in complete accord throughout, was necessarily restricted to one of remonstrance and to an endeavour to expose and to defeat the German intrigues.

In pursuance of a long-prepared policy, the greatest pressure was at once exercised by Germany to force Turkey into hostilities. German success in the European war was said to be assured. The perpetual menace to Turkey from Russia might, it was suggested, be averted by a timely alliance with Germany and Austria. Egypt might be recovered for the Empire. India and other Moslem countries represented as groaning under Christian rule might be kindled into a flame of infinite possibilities for the Caliphate of Constantinople. Turkey would emerge from the war the one great Power of the East, even as Germany would be the one great Power of the West. Such was the substance of German misrepresentations. It is a matter of common consent that Enver Pasha, dominated by a quasi-Napoleonic ideal, by political Pan-Islamism, and by a conviction of the superiority of the German arms, was from the first a strong partisan of the German alliance. How far his several colleagues and other directing spirits outside the Ministry entered into his views is to some extent a matter of speculation; but it may be taken as certain that the Sultan, the Heir Apparent, the Grand Vizier, Djavid Bey, a majority of the Ministry, and a considerable section of the Committee of Union and Progress were opposed to so desperate an adventure as war with the allies. At what moment Talaat Bey, the most powerful civilian in the Cabinet and the most conspicuous of the Committee leaders, finally threw in his lot with the war party cannot be ascertained precisely. His sympathies were undoubtedly with them from the beginning, but the part which he actually played in the earlier stages is shrouded in mystery. I have reason to think that for some time he may have thought it possible, by steering a middle course, to postpone a decision until it was clearer what would be the result of the European war; and he may well have been anxious to gain time and to secure in exchange for Turkey's adhesion to the German cause something more solid than promises. These were tendered, indeed, on a lavish scale, but I am not aware that they were given in a form which could be considered binding. It is certain in any case that Talaat Bey's hesitations were overcome, and that he had definitely joined the conspiracy to bring about war this autumn some three weeks before the crisis was precipitated.

Whatever the views of individual Ministers or others may have been, the Turkish Government made no effort to emancipate themselves from German influence or to stem the tide of its progress. The material hold established by the introduction of the two German ships was on the contrary allowed to be strengthened. Not only did these ships remain under effective German control, but a strong German element was imported into the remainder of the fleet, even before the British naval mission, which had been reduced to impotence by order of the Minister of Marine, had been recalled by His Majesty's Government. Large numbers of Germans were imported from Germany as unostentatiously as possible, to be employed in the forts of the Dardanelles and Bosphorus and at other crucial points. Numerous German merchant vessels, of which the most important were the "Corcovado" and the "General," served as bases of communication and as auxiliaries to what had become in effect a German Black Sea Fleet. Secret communications with the German General Staff were established at the outbreak of the war by means of the wireless apparatus of the "Corcovado," which was anchored opposite the German Embassy at Therapia, and which was continuously used for this among other purposes throughout the whole period under review, in spite of my urgent representations and those of my French and Russian colleagues. Other German ships played with the Turkish flag as they pleased, in order to facilitate their voyages or cloak their real character while in port, and a department was constituted at the German Embassy for the purpose of requisitioning supplies for the use of the German Government and their ships. All these things were tolerated by a complaisant Turkish Government, who appeared to be indifferent to the incessant encroachments on their sovereignty if not to welcome them.

On land, the officers of the German military mission displayed a ubiquitous activity. Their supremacy at the Ministry of War, combined with the close co operation which existed between them and the Militarist party, made it easy to fortify an already strong position. Acting in conjunction with other less accredited agents of their own nationality, they were the main organisers of those military preparations in Syria which so directy menaced Egypt, and which became a serious source of preoccupation and a constant theme of my remonstrances.

The evidence of these preparations became daily more convincing. Emissaries of Enver Pasha were present on the frontier, bribing and organising the Bedouins. Warlike stores were despatched south, and battalions of regular troops were posted at Rafah, whilst the Syrian and Mosul army corps were held in readiness to move south at short notice. The Syrian towns were full of German officers, who were provided with large sums of money for suborning the local chiefs. As an illustration of the thoroughness of the German preparations, I was credibly informed that orders were given to obtain estimates for the making of Indian military costumes at Aleppo in order to simulate the appearance of British Indian Troops. Under directions from the Central Government the civil authorities of the Syrian coast towns removed all their archives and ready money to the interior, and Moslem families were warned to leave to avoid the consequences of bombardment by the British fleet. The Khedive himself was a party to the conspiracy, and arrangements were actually made with the German Embassy for his presence with a military expedition across the frontier.

However difficult it would have been for the Ottoman Government to regain their control over the armed forces of the State after the arrival of the "Goeben" and "Breslau," the insidious campaign carried on with their encouragement by means of the press, the preachers in the mosques, and the pamphleteers, is evidence that its most powerful members were in sympathy with the anti-British movement. I had, indeed, actual proof of the inspirations by Talaat Bey and Djemal Pasha of articles directed against Great Britain. Every agency which could be used to stimulate public opinion in favour of Germany and to inflame it against the allies was set at work with the connivance, and often with the co-operation, of the Turkish authorities. All the Turkish newspapers in Constantinople became German organs; they glorified every real or imaginary success of Germany or Austria; they minimised everything favourable to the allies.

The enclosures in an earlier despatch will have shown to what depths of scurrility some of the more corrupt and unbridled of them descended in their onslaughts on Great Britain, and how unequally the censors of the press held the balance when exercising their practically unlimited powers. The provincial papers were no less enthusiastically pro-German; the semi-official telegraphic agency, which is practically worked by the Ministry of the Interior, was placed at the disposal of German propaganda. Through these agencies unlimited use was made of Turkey's one concrete and substantial grievance against Great Britain as distinguished from other European Powers, that is, the detention of the "Sultan Osman" and the "Reshadie" at the beginning of the European war. Other grievances, older and less substantial, were raked out of the past; and the indictment of Great Britain and her allies was completed by a series of inventions and distortions of the truth designed to represent them as the enemy, not merely of Turkey, but of the whole of Islam. Attacks of the latter kind became especially frequent in the latter half of October, and were undoubtedly directly inspired by Germany. My urgent representations to the Grand Vizier and to Talaat Bey, both verbal and written, had hardly even a temporary effect in checking this campaign.

It may seem strange that, thus equipped and thus abetted, those who sought to involve Turkey in the European war failed so long to achieve their object. The reasons were manifold. As I have already indicated, the party which stood for neutrality contained men who, lacking though they were in any material means of enforcing their views, could not easily be ignored. By whatever various routes they may have been arrived at, the ideas of these men coincided with a body of less sophisticated and hardly articulate opinion which, however wounded by England's action in preventing delivery of the "Sultan Osman" and the "Reshadie," could still not reconcile itself to a war with England and France. In my despatch of the 22nd September I had the honour to report how frankly and how emphatically the Sultan himself voiced this feeling in conversation with me. There can be little doubt that the Grand Vizier exercised what influence he had in favour of neutrality. Djavid Bey, the Minister of Finance, whose influence in favour of neutrality was of weight as representing the Jewish element, and whose arguments in favour of peace were supported by the fact that Turkey was already absolutely bankrupt, and not in a position to embark upon war with the allies, became towards the end so formidable an obstacle to the fulfilment of the German plan that instructions were sent from Berlin to force his resignation.

Again, seriously convinced as most prominent Turks appear to have been of the ultimate success of Germany, their confidence could not but be a little dashed by the actual course of events in the two main theatres of war; and the more thoughtful realized that even in the event of Germany being victorious, the fact of Turkey having fought by her side would not necessarily ensure any advantage to the Ottoman Empire. As for the Germans themselves, it was true, as I have said, that they could at any moment force Turkey to march with them, but to do so before every means of suasion had proved useless would obviously not have been politic. It was clearly only in the last resort that the Monarch whom Pan-Islamic pro-Germans acclaimed as the hope of Islam, and whom the devout in some places had been taught to regard as hardly distinguishable from a true believer, would run the risk of scandalising the Moslem world, whom he hoped to set ablaze to the undoing of England, Russia, and France, by using the guns of the "Goeben" to force the hands of the Sultan-Caliph. But the factor which more than any other delayed the realisation of the German plans, and which enabled me and my French and Russian colleagues to protract the crisis until they could only be realized in such a way as to open the eyes of the Moslem world to the real nature of the conspiracy, was the inherent tendency of Turkish statesmen to procrastinate, in the hope that by playing off one side against the other they might gain more in the long run.

However slender the chances in our favour, it was obviously my duty, in conjunction with my French and Russian colleagues, to support and encourage by all possible means those forces which were obscurely striving for the preservation of peace.

If this policy necessarily involved the acceptance of acts on the part of the Ottoman Government which, in ordinary circumstances, would have called for more than remonstrance and the reservation of our rights, and which it would have been easy to make the occasion of a rupture of relations, the patience displayed by the allies was justified by the results achieved.

Although unsuccessful in averting war, two objects of main importance were gained by delaying its commencement. On the one hand, the allied Powers are now in a position to deal with the problem with a freer hand, and, on the other, Germany has been forced to show her cards and to act independently of a majority of the Turkish Cabinet.

Under the stress of events in the main theatre of the war, and owing to the vital necessity of providing a diversion in the Near East, Germany was constrained to intensify still further their pressure on the Turks. During the first three weeks of October their pressure took yet another form, and a new weight was cast into the scale by the importation into Constantinople, with every circumstance of secrecy, of large quantities of bullion consigned to the German Ambassador and delivered under military guard at the Deutsche Bank. The total amount was estimated at some 4,000,000*l*. This sum was far more than was necessary for the maintenance of the German military and naval establishments, and I have every reason to believe that a definite arrangement was arrived at between the Germans and a group of Ministers, including Enver Pasha, Talaat Bey, and Djemal Pasha, that Turkey should declare war as soon as the financial provision should have attained a stated figure. My information establishes the fact that a climax was reached about the middle of the third week in October, when it had been decided to confront the Grand Vizier with the alternative of complicity or resignation, and that only the Russian successes on the Vistula, or some other more obscure cause, prevented this plan from being carried out.

Whatever the exact history of the first three weeks of October, it is certain that on or about the 26th of that month the German conspirators realised that the pace must be forced by still more drastic measures than they had yet used and that any further attempts to win over the Grand Vizier and the Turkish Government as a whole to their ideas and to induce them to declare war would be useless. On that afternoon an important meeting of Committee leaders was held, at which Enver Pasha was present, but which only decided to send Halil Bey, the President of the Chamber, on a mission to Berlin. In the circles in which this decision became known it was regarded as a partial triumph for the Peace party, and as a fresh attempt to gain time for the sake either of mere procrastination or of securing more concrete offers from Germany. Be that as it may, Halil Bey never left on his mission, and it is believed that its abandonment was due to a more than usually blunt hint from the German representative in Constantinople. Whilst Constantinople generally was comforting itself with the reflection that nothing could well happen until after the four days' Bairam festival, beginning on the 30th October two events of capital importance occurred.

On the morning of the 29th I received intelligence from Egypt of the incursion into the Sinai peninsula of an armed body of 2,000 Bedouins, who had occupied the wells of Magdaba, and whose objective was an attack upon Suez Canal. On learning this news I at once proceeded to the Yali of the Grand Vizier, to acquaint him of the serious consequences which must ensue if the expedition were not at once recalled. His Highness received the intelligence with every appearance of surprise. He emphatically disclaimed all knowledge of it, and gave me the most solemn assurance that if the facts were as stated he would at once issue orders for the withdrawal of the invading party. He assured me once more that nothing was further from the intention of the Government than war with Great Britain. It was unthinkable, he said, that an expedition of this kind could have been organized by any member of the Government; and he felt certain that if anything of the kind had occurred, it could only have been a raid by irresponsible Bedouins. I told His Highness that I feared that he deceived himself. I reminded him of the various occasions on which he had given me similar assurances, and of the negative results of the instructions which he had given on previous occasions. I warned him of the disastrous consequences to the Ottoman Empire of a crisis which could not now be long postponed unless he and the friends of peace were prepared to take some serious stand against the conspiracy of which I was fully cognisant, to involve it irretrievably in the general war. On this, as on every occasion of my interviews with the Grand Vizier, I was impressed with his inability to realise the facts or to disabuse himself of the conviction, in spite of his many unfortunate experiences, that he would be able, in a really serious crisis, to exert his authority with effect.

The second event of capital importance was the attack on Odessa and other Russian ports in the Black Sea on the morning of the same day, the 29th October. It is now certain that the actual orders for these attacks were given by the German admiral on the evening of the 27th October, but it was not until after they had actually taken place, that is, on the afternoon of the 29th October, when news of the raid on Odessa was telegraphed to me direct by Mr. Consul-General Roberts, that my Russian and French colleagues and myself realised that the die had actually been cast and the crisis that we had so long feared and striven to avert had occurred. Immediately on receiving the news M. Bompard and I called on M. de Giers and decided to ask for authority from our respective Governments to confront the Porte with the alternative of rupture or dismissal of the German naval and military missions. On the morning of the 30th, however, I learnt from my Russian colleague that he had received instructions from his Government immediately to ask for his passports. He had written to the Grand Vizier to ask for an interview, which His Highness had begged him to postpone until the following day owing to indisposition. The instructions of my Russian colleague being in a categorical form, he had therefore been constrained to address a note to the Grand Vizier demanding his passports; and I and my French colleague, acting on the instructions with which the Ambassadors of the allied Powers had at my suggestion already been furnished to leave Constantinople simultaneously, should any one of them be compelled to ask for his passports, owing either to a Turkish declaration of war or to some intolerable act of hostility, decided without further delay to write to the Grand Vizier and ask in our turn for interviews to enable us to carry out these instructions. In view of His Highness's indisposition we had not expected to be received that day, but a few hours later the Grand Vizier sent us word that he would, nevertheless, be glad to see us, and notwithstanding the excuse which he had made earlier in the day he received the Russian Ambassador also in the course of the afternoon. My interview with the Grand Vizier partly coincided with that of M. de Giers, and preceded that of M. Bompard. It was of a painful description. His Highness convinced me of his sincerity in disclaiming all knowledge of or participation in the events which had led to the rupture, and entreated me to believe that the situation was even now not irretrievable. I replied that the time had passed for assurances. The crisis which I had predicted to His Highness at almost every interview which I had had with him since my return had actually occurred, and unless some adequate satisfaction were immediately given by the dismissal of the German missions, which could alone prevent the recurrence of attempts upon Egyptian territory and attacks on Russia, war with the allies was inevitable. My Russian colleague had already demanded his passports, and I must, in pursuance of the instructions I had received, follow the same course. The Grand Vizier again protested that even now he could undo what the War party had done without his knowledge or consent. In reply to the doubt which I expressed as to the means at his disposal, he said that he had on his side moral forces which could not but triumph, and that he meant to fight on to the end. He did not, indeed, hint at a possibility of immediately dismissing the German mission, but he informed me that there was to be a meeting of the Council at his house that evening, when he would call upon his colleagues to support him in his determination to avert war with the allied Powers.

The Council was duly held, and, as he had predicted, the majority of the Ministers supported the Grand Vizier, who made a strong appeal in favour of peace, and was seconded by Djavid Bey. But the powerlessness of the Sultan's Ministers to do more than vote in the Council Chamber was evident. The question of dismissing the German naval officers was discussed, but no decision to do so was taken, and no Minister ventured even to propose the expulsion of the military mission. In the interval the War party had sealed their resolution to go forward, by publishing a communiqué in which it was stated that the first acts of hostility in the Black Sea had come from the Russian side. Untrue and grotesque as it was, this invention succeeded in deceiving many of the public.

It is not possible to establish by proof which of the Ministers had pre-knowledge of the German admiral's coup, but it may be regarded as certain that Enver Pasha was aware of it, and highly probable that Talaat Bey was also an accomplice.

The story of a Russian provocation was plainly an afterthought, and if the official report of the Russian Government were not sufficient to disprove it, I could produce independent evidence to show that the orders to begin hostilities were given at the mouth of the Bosphorus on the evening of the 27th October, as the result of a conspiracy hatched between the German representatives in Constantinople and a small and unscrupulous Turkish faction.

My Russian colleague left Constantinople without incident on the evening of the 31st October. My own departure was eventually arranged for the following evening, when I left for Dedeagatch, accompanied by my staff of sixty officials and their families, the British advisers in the service of the Turkish Government and some other British subjects also travelled with me. My French colleague and his staff left by the same train.

Owing to the wanton refusal of the military authorities at the last moment to allow the departure of a great number of British and French subjects who were to have left by an earlier train than that which had been placed at my disposal, the station was for some hours the scene of indescribable confusion and turmoil.

My protests and those of the French Ambassador were disregarded, and after protracted discussion, we agreed to leave matters in the hands of the United States Ambassador, who undertook to use all his influence to procure the departure of our fellow subjects on the following day. The "sous-chef de protocole" of the Sublime Porte and the "chef de cabinet particulier" of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs were sent to bid farewell to M. Bompard and myself at the railway station and two Secretaries of the Political Department of the Ministry accompanied us to the frontier.

It would be impossible to exaggerate the assistance which I have received from Mr. Morgenthau, the United States Ambassador. During the last two days especially the difficulties arising out of the abnormality of the situation would have been immeasurably greater had it not been for his invaluable help and his untiring efforts on behalf of myself and my staff. We are heavily indebted not only to Mr. Morgenthau himself, but to every member of the United States Embassy. It is entirely owing to their exertions that the British and French subjects who were detained at the station on the night of my departure were allowed to leave on the following evening.

Before concluding this despatch I desire also to place on record my sense of the cheerful courage displayed by the British community in Constantinople, as well as in other towns, during the whole of this trying period. A large proportion of them have suffered severely in their business from the instability of the situation in Turkey. Many have suffered heavily and more directly by the military requisitions which from the beginning of August were carried out in an inconceivably arbitrary manner. By the suppression of the Capitulations all saw themselves deprived at a moment's notice of the secular privileges which had hitherto secured the persons and the property of foreigners against caprice and injustice. But they have one and all faced these adversities with a reasonable and manly fortitude.

Shortly after my return to my post, I recommended those British subjects who applied to me for advice to send home, when opportunity offered, those members of their families who had no particular reason to stay in the country.

A certain number left during the autumn, and many have left since. Those who have chosen to stay, or who have not been in a position to leave, remain under the protection of the United States Ambassador. As regards the British community at Bagdad, I instructed the acting British Consul-General at Bagdad, early in October, to charter a steamer for the conveyance to the coast of any British subjects who might wish to leave. A large number of British and British-Indian subjects availed themselves of this opportunity.

I cannot conclude this report without calling your attention to the zeal shown by the junior members of my staff, including Mr. Ovey, Lord Gerald Wellesley, Mr. Charles Lister, Mr. Thomas, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Astell, and by Mr. Fuller, Archivisit to His Majesty's Embassy, in the performance of their duties in the Chancery, as well as to the able and conscientious work of the members of the Dragomanate and consulate-general.

The Chancery was greatly assisted by the voluntary help kindly offered to them by the Judge Cator, the Rev. Canon Whitehouse, Chaplain to His Majesty's Embassy, and by Dr. Clemow, Physician to His Majesty's Embassy, as well as by Mr. Weakley, Commercial Attaché.

I need not do more than refer to the work of Lieutenant-Colonel Cunliffe Owen, Military Attaché to His Majesty's Embassy, whose information respecting the military preparations was often obtained with considerable difficulty.

I should like to place on record my high appreciation of the conduct of His Majesty's consular officers throughout the Ottoman Empire during the whole period of the crisis. They one and all performed their often difficult duties with zeal and discretion. I was specially indebted to Mr. Cumberbatch, His Majesty's Consul-General at Beirut, Mr. Heathcote Smith, acting British Consul-General at Smyrna and to Mr. Palmer, Vice-Consul at Dardanelles, for the valuable information which they supplied.

I would wish to bring to your particular notice the services rendered by Mr. Ryan, Acting First Dragoman of His Majesty's Embassy. His ability, knowledge of Turkey, sound judgment and untiring industry, were of invaluable assistance to me, and are deserving of your special commendation.

Sir Edward Grey to Sir L. Mallet.

Foreign Office, December 4, 1914.

SIR,

I HAVE received your Excellency's despatch of the 20th ultimo, in which you summarise the events since your return to your post on the 16th August last until your departure on the 1st November.

I have read with great appreciation and pleasure of the invaluable assistance rendered to your Excellency in the difficult circumstances of your departure by the United States Ambassador and every member of the United States Embassy, and I have already requested the United States Government to convey to Mr. Morgenthau the most sincere thanks of His Majesty's Government for the valuable services rendered by His Excellency on that occasion, and subsequently in helping the British community to leave Constantinople.

I have also been much gratified to receive your Excellency's testimony of the cheerful courage of the British community in Turkey under exceptionally trying circumstances, and I have noted with great satisfaction your Excellency's appreciation of the valuable services of the Embassy and consulate staff, and of the members of His Majesty's consular service throughout the Ottoman Empire.

I desire also to convey to your Excellency my high sense of the marked ability, patience, and discretion shown by your Excellency in carrying out, in the face of great difficulties, the policy of His Majesty's Government. War was eventually forced by wanton and unprovoked hostilities of the Turkish fleet under German inspiration and orders, but it was the desire of His Majesty's Government to avoid a rupture with Turkey; and your Excellency rightly directed all your efforts to encourage those influences at Constantinople that were moderate and reasonable. To your efforts it was at any rate in some degree due that the inevitable catastrophe did not occur sooner.

I am, &c.,

CHAPTER I.

WARNINGS (1913).

No. 1.

M. Jules Cambon, Ambassador of the Republic at Berlin, to M. Jonnart, Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Berlin, March 17, 1913.

OUR naval and military attachés are sending to their respective Ministers reports on the new German military law. I take this opportunity of drawing the attention of Your Excellency to these important documents.

The consideration of the financial expedients by which Germany intends to provide for these military measures is the sole cause of the delay in the publication of the definite proposals of the Government. In spite of the patriotism with which the rich classes affect to accept the sacrifices asked of them, they are none the less, particularly the business circles, dissatisfied with the financial measures which have been announced, and they feel that a compulsory levy imposed in times of peace creates a formidable precedent for the future. On the other hand, the Federal Governments have strongly opposed an innovation which grants to the Empire resources derived from direct taxation. Hitherto, taxation of this kind has been reserved to the Federal States, and the latter see in the surrender of this principle a new declaration of the corporate unity (personalité) of the Empire, constituting a distinct diminution of their own sovereign power.

However this may be, in increasing the strength of the German army the Empire desires to leave nothing to chance in the event of a possible crisis.

The German changes have produced a result unexpected by that country, viz., the proposal of the Government of the Republic to re-establish the three years' service, and the manly determination with which this proposal has been welcomed in France. The surprise occasioned by these proposals has been utilized by the Imperial Government for the purpose of insisting on the absolute necessity of an increase of German military strength the German proposals are represented as a reply to our own. The reverse is the case, since the immense military effort which France is undertaking is but the consequence of German initiative.

The Imperial Government is constantly rousing patriotic sentiment. Every day the Emperor delights to revive memories of 1813. Yesterday evening a military tattoo went through the streets of Berlin, and speeches were delivered in which the present situation was compared to that of a hundred years ago. The trend of public opinion will find an echo in the speeches which will be delivered next month in the Reichstag, and I have reason to fear that the Chancellor himself will be forced to allude in his statements to the relations of France and Germany. It was of course to be expected that national patriotism would be worked up just when fresh sacrifices are being required, but to compare the present time to 1813 is to misuse an historical analogy. If, to-day, there is anything corresponding to the movement which a hundred years ago roused Germans to fight the man of genius who aspired to universal dominion, it is in France that such a counterpart would have to be sought, since the French nation seeks but to protect itself against the domination of force.

Nevertheless, it is true that the state of public opinion in both countries makes the situation grave.

JULES CAMBON.

ENCLOSURE 1.

Report of Lieutenant-Colonel Serret, Military Attaché to the Embassy of the French Republic at Berlin, to M. Étienne, Minister of War.

Berlin, March 15, 1913.

THE patriotic movement which has manifested itself in France has caused real anger in certain circles.

I do not, indeed, mean to say that the virulent article in the Kolnische Zeitung is the expression of prevalent opinion. It is rather the angry outburst of an impulsive journalist, which has been immediately disavowed by the Government.

However, in spite of its want of good manners the article in the Kolnische Zeitung cannot be disregarded ; several important newspapers have approved of its substance, if not of its form, and it appears to express a real feeling, a latent anger.

It is interesting to note this fact, because it throws very vivid light on the meaning of the present armaments.

For some time now it has been quite a common thing to meet people who declare that the military plans of France are extraordinary and unjustified. In a drawing room a member of the Reichstag who is not a fanatic, speaking of the three years' service in France, went so far as to say, " It is a provocation ; we will not allow it." More moderate persons, military and civil, glibly voice the opinion that France with her forty million inhabitants has no right to compete in this way with Germany.

To sum up, people are angry, and this anger is not caused by the shrieking of certain French papers, to which sober-minded people pay little attention. It is a case of vexation. People are angry at realising that in spite of the enormous effort made last year, continued and even increased this year, it will probably not be possible this time to outrun France completely.

To outdistance us, since we neither will nor can be allied with her, is Germany's real aim. I cannot insist too much on the fact that the impending legislation, which French public opinion is to apt to consider as a spontaneous outburst, is but the inevitable and expected consequence of the law of June 1912.

This law, while creating two new army corps, had deliberately, according to German fashion, left regiments and other large units incomplete. It was evident that there would be no long delay in filling in the gaps.* The Balkan crisis, coming just at the right moment, furnished a wonderful opportunity for exploiting the centenary of the War of Liberation, and obtaining with greater ease sacrifices through the memory of those made in days gone by, and that too at a time when Germany was opposed to France,

In order to show clearly the genesis of this military programme, I beg to recall what was written by my predecessor Colonel Pelle a year ago, when the law of 1912 was published :

" We are discovering every day how deep and lasting are the feelings of injured pride and revenge provoked against us by the events of last year.

" The Treaty of the 4th November 1911 has proved a complete disillusion.

" The feeling is the same in all parties. All Germans, even the Socialists, bear us a grudge for having taken away their share in Morocco.

" It seemed, a year or so ago, as if the Germans had set out to conquer the world. They considered themselves so strong that no one would dare to oppose them. Limitless possibilities were opening out for German manufactures, German trade, German expansion.

" Needless to say, these ideas and ambitions have not disappeared to-day. Germany always requires outlets for commercial and colonial expansion. They consider that they are entitled to them, because their population is increasing every day, because the future belongs to them. They consider us, with our forty million inhabitants, as a second rate power.

" In the crisis of 1911, however, this second rate power successfully withstood them, and the Emperor and the Government gave way. Public opinion has forgiven neither them nor us. People are determined that such a thing shall never happen again."

And at the moment when the second and formidable part of the programme is about to be realised, when German military strength is on the point of acquiring that final superiority which, should the occasion arise, would force us to submit to

* The problem which is set us to-day would, therefore, only be set again a few years later, and in a much more acute fashion, since the decrease of our contiugents is continually lowering the number of our effectives on a peace footing humiliation or destruction, France suddenly refuses to abdicate, and shows, as Renan said, " her eternal power of renaissance and resurrection." The disgust of Germany can well be understood.

Of course the Government points to the general situation in Europe and speaks of the " Slav Peril." As far as I can see, however, public opinion really seems indifferent to this " Peril," and yet it has accepted with a good grace, if not with welcome, the enormous burdens of these two successive laws.

On the 10th March last, being the centenary of the levée en masse of Germany against France, in spite of a downpour of rain, a huge crowd surged to the military parade in front of the Schloss, in the middle of the Tiergarten, in front of the statues of Queen Louise and Frederick William III, which were surrounded by heaps of flowers.

These anniversaries, recalling as they do the fight with France, will be repeated the whole year through. In 1914 there will be a centenary of the first campaign in France, the first entry of the Prussians into Paris.

To sum up, if public opinion does not actually point at France, as does the Kolnische Zeitung, we are in fact, and shall long remain the nation aimed at. Germany considers that for our forty millions of inhabitants our place in the sun is really too large.

Germans wish for peace—so they keep on proclaiming, and the Emperor more than anyone—but they do not understand peace as involving either mutual concessions or a balance of armaments. They want to be feared and they are at present engaged in making the necessary sacrifices. If on some occasion their national vanity is wounded, the confidence which the country will feel in the enormous superiority of its army will be favourable to an explosion of national anger, in the face of which the moderation of the Imperial Government will perhaps be powerless.

It must be emphasized again that the Government is doing everything to increase patriotic sentiment by celebrating with eclat all the various anniversaries of 1813.

The trend of public opinion would result in giving a war a more or less national character. By whatever pretext Germany should justify the European conflagration, nothing can prevent the first decisive blows being struck at France.

ENCLOSURE II.

M. de Faramond, Naval Acttaché to the French Embassy at Berlin, to M. Baudin, Minister of Marine.

Berlin, March 15, 1913.

IN reporting on the examination of the Naval Budget by the Financial Committee of the Riechstag, I said that no Naval law would be introduced this year having as its object an increase of the fleet, and that the whole of military effort would be directed against us.

Although the new Bill, having for its object the increase of the German effectives, has not yet been presented to the Reichstag, we know that it deals with "an increase of military strength of immense scope," to use the expression of the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung.

The official newspapers have also referred to the military proposal in terms which enable us to consider the communiqué of the Lokal Anzeiger as accurate.

The German effectives reach at the present moment 720,000 men. We are, therefore, entitled to conclude that on the 1st October 1914, the Imperial army will be raised to a figure not far removed from 860,000.

The importance of this figure would not be so great if the provisions of the proposed legislation (as far as one can gather from the official newspapers) did not tend, as, in fact, those of the law of 1912 tend, to place the army corps nearest to our frontier in a state which most nearly approaches a war footing, in order to be able, on the very day of the outbreak of hostilities, to attack us suddenly with forces very much stronger than our own. It is absolutely imperative for the Imperial Government to obtain success at the very outset of the operations.

The conditions under which the German Emperor would nowadays commence a campaign against France are not those of forty years ago. At the commencement of the war of 1870 the Prussian General Staff had considered the possibility of a victorious French offensive, and Moltke, seeing that we might conceivably get as far as Mayence, remarked to his sovereign, "There they will come to a stop." William II cannot allow a retreat to enter into his calculations, although the German soldier is no longer to-day what he was forty years ago, a plain religious man, ready to die at the order of his king. When it is remembered that at the last elections 4,000,000 votes were cast by the Socialists and that the franchise is only obtained in Germany at the age of 25, it may be presumed that the active army, composed of young men from 20 to 25, must contain in its ranks a considerable proportion of Socialists.

It would indeed be foolish to think that the German Socialists will throw down their rifles on the day when France and Germany come to blows; but it will be very important that the Imperial Government should persuade them that on the one hand we are the aggressors, and on the other that they can have entire confidence in the direction of the campaign and its final result.

On the last occasion when the recruits for the Guard took the oath at Potsdam I was struck to hear the Emperor take as a theme for his address to the young soldiers "the duty of being braver and more disciplined in adversity than in success."

And it is because a German defeat at the outset would have such an incalculable effect on the Empire, that we find in all the plans worked out by the General Staff proposals for a crushing offensive movement against France.

In reality the Imperial Government wishes to be in a position to meet all possible eventualities. It is from the direction of France that the danger seems to them greatest. The Kolnische Zeitung has said as much in an article both spiteful and violent, the form rather than the substance of which has been disavowed by the Wilhelmstrasse.

But we must be willing to realise that the opinion expressed by the Kolnische Zeitung is at the present moment that of the immense majority of the German people.

In this connection I think it is interesting to quote a conversation which a member of our Embassy had the other evening with the old Prince Henckel von Donnersmarck, as it may serve to reflect the opinions which dominate Court circles.

Referring to the new German military proposals Prince Donnersmarck spoke as follows:—

"French people are quite wrong in thinking that we harbour evil designs and want war. But we cannot forget that in 1870 popular opinion forced the French Government to make a foolish attack on us before they were ready. Who can assure us that public opinion, which in France is so easily inflamed, will not force the Government to declare war? It is against this danger that we wish to protect ourselves."

And the Prince added: "I have even been considered in France as one of those responsible for the war of 1870. That is quite false. Even if I took part in the war after it had begun, I did my utmost to prevent its outbreak. A short time before the war, happening to be at a dinner where there were some of the most important personages of the Imperial Government, I expressed my regret at the hostile sentiments which were already becoming manifest between France and Prussia. The answer was that, if I spoke like that, it was because I was afraid of a struggle in which the issue would certainly be unfavourable to Prussia. I replied, 'No, it is not because I am afraid that I repudiate the idea of war between France and Prussia, but rather because I think that it is in the interest of both countries to avoid war. And since you have referred to the possible result of such a struggle I will give you my opinion. I am convinced that you will be beaten and for this reason. In spite of the brilliant qualities which I recognise are possessed by the French and which I admire, you are not sufficiently accurate; by accuracy I do not mean arriving in time at a meeting, but I mean punctuality in the whole sense of the word. Frenchmen, who have a great facility for work, are not as punctual as Germans in the fulfilment of their duty. In the coming war that nation will be victorious whose servants from the top of the ladder to the bottom will do their duty with absolute exactitude, however important or small it may be.'" And Prince Donnersmarck added: "An exactitude which played so great a rôle forty years ago in moving an army of 500,000 men will have a far greater importance in the next war, when it will be a question of moving masses far more numerous."

In this way the old Prince gave expression to the confidence shared by all Germans in the superiority of their military organisation.

When I spoke above of the new German proposal I only alluded to increased effectives. But the proposal will include also an increase of material and of defence works. the details of which are not known, but some idea of which may be gained by the figure estimated to be necessary to meet the expenses, viz., 1,250,000,000 francs.

The carrying into effect of the law of the quinquennium of 1911 did not necessitate any special financial measures.

The military and naval law of 1912 had been provisionally covered by the Budget surplus of the years 1910 and 1911, by the reform of the law with regard to alcohol, and by delaying the reduction of the tax on sugar. (These last two resources only represent together the sum of 60,000,000 francs.)

It must also be remembered that large loans have recently been raised by the Empire and Prussia: 500,00),000 marks on the 29th January 1912, and 350,000,000 marks on the 7th March 1913. Quite an important part of these loans must have been applied to military expenses.

The military law of 1913 will require quite exceptional financial measures.

According to the indications given by the semi-official press, the "non-recurring" expenditure will amount to a milliard marks, while the "permanent" annual expenditure resulting from the increase of effectives will exceed 200,000,000 marks.

It seems certain that the "non-recurring" expenditure will be covered by a war contribution levied on capital. Small fortunes would be exempted and those above 20.000 marks would be subject to a progressive tax. Presented in this guise the war tax would not be objected to by the Socialists, who will be able, in accordance with their usual tactics, to reject the principle of the military law and at the same time to pass the votes which assure its being carried into effect.

The Government are afraid that among the rich and bourgeois classes this extraordinary tax of a milliard levied exclusively on acquired capital will cause permanent discontent. Accordingly they are doing everything in their power to persuade those on whom so heavy an exaction is to be levied that the security of the Empire is threatened, establishing for the purpose on analogy between the warlike times of 1813 and the present day.

By noisy celebrations of the centenary of the War of Independence it is desired to convince people of the necessity of sacrifice, and to remind them that France is to-day, as 100 years ago, their hereditary enemy.

If it is established that the German Government are doing their utmost to secure that the payment of this enormous tax should be made in full, and not by way of instalment, and if, as some of the newspapers say, the whole payment is to be complete before 1st July 1914, these facts have a formidable significance for us, for nothing can explain such haste on the part of the military authorities to obtain war treasure in cash to the amount of a milliard.

With regard to the manner in which the permanent expenditure resulting from the application of the laws of 1912 to 1913 is to be met, nothing has yet been said. Further legislation will certainly be necessary in order that the required annual amount may be forthcoming.

To sum up: In Germany the execution of military reforms always follows very closely the decision to carry them out. All the provisions made by the law of the quinquennium of 1911 and by the law of 1912 have already been put into operation. It is quite possible that part of the material, the purchase of which will be authorised by the new law, is already in course of manufacture. Military secrets are so well kept here that it is extremely difficult to follow the changes in personnel and matériel.

With 700,000 men under arms (without counting the very large number of reservists who are at the present time in training), a perfect military organisation and a public opinion which can be swayed by the warlike appeals of the Military and Naval Leagues. the German people is at the present moment a very dangerous neighbour.

If the three years' service is adopted and immediately applied in France, the conditions will be less unequal next year The German effectives will still be considerably more numerous than ours, but the call to the Colours of all available contingents will no longer allow any selection, and will bring into the ranks of the German army elements of inferior quality and even some undesirable individuals. The morale of the active army will deteriorate.

Germany has wished to upset the equilibrium of the two camps which divide Europe by a supreme e ort beyond which they can do little more.

They did not think that France was capable of a great sacrifice. Our adoption of the three years' service will upset their calculations.

No. 2.

M. Étienne, Minister of War, to M. Jonnart, Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Paris, April 2, 1913.

I HAVE just received from a reliable source an official secret report concerning the strengthening of the German army. The report is divided into two parts; the first consisting of general statements, the second dealing with technicalities and describing in the greatest detail, for each branch of the service, the measures to be adopted. Especially striking are the instructions with regard to the employment of motor-traction and the utilisation of aircraft.

I have the honour to enclose a copy of the first part of this document which seems to merit your attention.

ÉTIENNE.

ENCLOSURE.

Memorandum on the strengthening of the German Army.

Berlin, March 19, 1913.

I.—GENERAL MEMORANDUM ON THE NEW MILITARY LAWS.

The increase has taken place in three stages :—

(1) The Conference of Algeciras has removed the last doubt with regard to the existence of an Entente between France, England, and Russia. Moreover, we have seen that Austria-Hungary was obliged to keep some of her forces mobilised against Servia and Italy; finally our fleet was not at that time sufficiently strong. At the end of the dispute the first matter taken in hand was the strengthening of our coast defences and the increase of our naval forces. To meet the English plan of sending an Expeditionary Force of 100,000 men to the Continent, it would be necessary to make a better formation of reserves to be used according to circumstances in the protection of the Coast, in fortresses and in seige operations. It was already clear at that time that it would be absolutely necessary to make a great effort.

(2) The French have violated the Morocco Conventions brought on the incident of Agadir. At that time the progress made by the French army, the moral recovery of the nation, the technical advance in the realm of aviation and of machine guns rendered an attack on France less easy than in the previous period. Further, an attack by the English fleet had to be considered. This difficult situation opened our eyes to the necessity for an increase in the army. This increase was from this moment considered as a minimum.

(3) The war in the Balkans might have involved us in a war in support of our ally. The new situation in the south of Austria-Hungary lessened the value of the help which this ally could give us. On the other hand, France was strengthened by a new loi des cadres; it was accordingly necessary to anticipate the date of execution contemplated by the new military law.

Public opinion is being prepared for a new increase in the active army, which would ensure Germany an honourable peace and the possibility of properly ensuring her influence in the affairs of the world. The new army law and the supplementary law which should follow will enable her almost completely to attain this end.

Neither ridiculous shriekings for revenge by French chauvinists, nor the Englishmen's gnashing of teeth, nor the wild gestures of the Slavs, will turn us from our aim of protecting and extending Deutschtum (German influence) all the world over.

The French may arm as much as they wish: they cannot in one day increase their population. The employment of an army of negroes in the theatre of European operations will remain for a long time a dream. and in any case be devoid of beauty.

II.—AIM AND OBLIGATIONS OF OUR NATIONAL POLICY, OF OUR ARMY, AND OF THE SPECIAL ORGANISATIONS FOR ARMY PURPOSES.

Our new army law is only an extension of the military education of the German nation. Our ancestors of 1913 made greater sacrifices. It is our sacred duty to sharpen the sword that has been put into our hands and to hold it ready for defence as well as for offence. We must allow the idea to sink into the minds of our people that our armaments are an answer to the armaments and policy of the French. We must accustom them to think that an offensive war on our part is a necessity, in order to combat the provocations of our adversaries. We must act with prudence so as not to arouse suspicion, and to avoid the crises which might injure our economic existence. We must so manage matters that under the heavy weight of powerful armaments, considerable sacrifices and strained political relations, an outbreak (Losschlagen) should be considered as a relief, because after it would come decades of peace and prosperity, as after 1870. We must prepare for war from the financial point of view; there is much to be done in this direction. We must not arouse the distrust of our financiers, but there are many things which cannot be concealed.

We must not be anxious about the fate of our colonies. The final result in Europe will settle their position. On the other hand, we must stir up trouble in the North of Africa and in Russia. It is a means of keeping the forces of the enemy engaged. It is, therefore, absolutely necessary that we should open up relations, by means of well-chosen organisations, with influential people in Egypt, Tunis, Algeria, and Morocco, in order to prepare the measures which would be necessary in the case of a European war. Of course in case of war we should openly recognise these secret allies; and on the conclusion of peace we should secure to them the advantages which they had gained. These aims are capable of realisation. The first attempt which was made some years ago opened up for us the desired relations. Unfortunately these relations were not sufficiently consolidated. Whether we like it or not, it will be necessary to resort to preparations of this kind, in order to bring a campaign rapidly to a conclusion.

Risings provoked in time of war by political agents need to be carefully prepared and by material means. They must break out simultaneously with the destruction of the means of communication; they must have a controlling head to be found among the influential leaders, religious or political. The Egyptian School is particularly suited to this purpose; more and more it serves as a bond between the intellectuals of the Muhammadan world.

However this may be, we must be strong in order to annihilate at one powerful swoop our enemies in the east and west. But in the next European war it will also be necessary that the small states should be forced to follow us or be subdued. In certain conditions their armies and their strong positions can be rapidly conquered or neutralised: this would probably be the case with Belgium and Holland, so as to prevent our enemy in the west from gaining territory which they could use as a base of operations against our flank. In the north we have nothing to fear from Denmark or Scandinavia, especially as in any event we shall provide for the concentration of a strong northern army, capable of replying to any menace from this direction. In the most unfavourable case, Denmark might be forced by England to abandon her neutrality: but by this time the decision would already have been reached both on land and on sea. Our northern army, the strength of which could be largely increased by Dutch formations, would oppose a very active defence to any offensive measures from this quarter.

In the south, Switzerland forms an extremely solid bulwark, and we can rely on her energetically defending her neutrality against France, and thus protecting our flank.

As was stated above, the situation with regard to the small states on our north-western frontier, cannot be viewed in quite the same light. This will be a vital question for us, and our aim must be to take the offensive with a large superiority from the first days. For this purpose it will be necessary to concentrate a large army, followed up by strong Landwehr formations, which will induce the small states to follow us or at least to remain inactive in the theatre of operations, and which would crush them in the event of armed resistance. If we could induce these states to organise their system of fortification in such a manner as to constitute an effective protection for our flank we could abandon the proposed invasion. But for this, army reorganisation, particularly in Belgium, would be necessary in order that it might really guarantee an effective resistance. If, on the contrary, their defensive organisation was established against us, thus giving definite advantages to our adversary in the west, we could in no circumstances offer Belgium a guarantee for the security of her neutrality. Accordingly, a vast field is open to our diplomacy to work in this country on the lines of our interests.

The arrangements made with this end in view allow us to hope that it will be possible to take the offensive immediately after the complete concentration of the army of the Lower Rhine. An ultimatum with a short time-limit, to be followed immediately by invasion, would allow a sufficient justification for our action in international law.

Such are the duties which devolve on our army and which demand a striking force of considerable numbers. If the enemy attacks us, or if we wish to overcome him. we will act as our brothers did a hundred years ago; the eagle thus provoked will soar in his flight, will seize the enemy in his steel claws and render him harmless. We will then remember that the provinces of the ancient German Empire, the County of Burgundy and a large part of Lorraine, are still in the hands of the French; that thousands of brother Germans in the Baltic provinces are groaning under the Slav yoke. It is a national question of restoring to Germany her former possessions

No. 3.

M. Jules Cambon, French Ambassador at Berlin, to M. Stephen Pichon, Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Berlin, May 6, 1913.

I WAS talking this evening to the Secretary of State about the conference of Ambassadors and the results obtained at the meeting in London yesterday. The crisis with which Europe was threatened is in his opinion over, but only temporarily. "It seems to me," said Herr von Jagow, "that we are travelling in a mountainous district. We have just reached a difficult pass and we see other heights rising in front of us." "The height which we have just surmounted," I replied, "was, perhaps, the most difficult to cross."

The crisis which we have just gone through has been very serious. Here the danger of war has been considered imminent. I have proof of the anxiety of the German Government by a number of facts which it is important that your Excellency should know.

I received yesterday a visit from one of my colleagues with whom I maintain special and cordial relations. On the occasion of the visit he paid to Herr von Jagow, the latter asked my colleague confidentially what was exactly the situation of Russia in the Far East, and whether this Power had at the present time any cause for fear which might necessitate the retention of its troops in that quarter. The Ambassador answered him that he knew of nothing, absolutely nothing, which could be a cause of preoccupation for the Russian Government, and that the latter have their hands free in Europe.

I said above that the danger of war had been regarded here as extremely near. The Government have not been satisfied with investigating the position in the Far East; perparations have even been made here.

The mobilisation of the German army is not restricted to the recall of reservists to their barracks. There is in Germany a preliminary measure which we have not got, and which consists in warning officers and men of the reserve to hold themselves ready for the call, in order that they may make the necessary arrangements. It is a general call to "attention" and it requires an incredible spirit of submission, discipline, and secrecy such as exisst in this country, to make a step of this kind possible. If such a warning were given in France, a thrill would run through the whole country, and it would be in the papers the next day.

This warning was given in 1911 during the negotiations which I was carrying on with regard to Morocco.

Now it has been given again about ten days ago—that is to say, at the moment of the Austro-Albanian tension. I know that this is so, and I have it from several different sources, notably from officers of the reserve who have told it to their friends in the strictest confidence. These gentlemen have taken the necessary measures to put as de in a safe the means of existence for their families for a year, It has even been said that it was for this reason that the Crown Prince, who was to make the trial trip on the "Imperator," did not embark.

The decision which occasioned this preliminary mobilisation order is quite in keeping with the ideas of the General Staff. On this point I have been informed of some remarks made in a German milieu by General von Moltke, who is considered here as the most distinguished officer of the German army.

The intention of the General Staff is to act by surprise. "We must put on one side," said General von Moltke, "all commonplaces as to the responsibility of the aggressor. When war has become necessary it is essential to carry it on in such a way as to place all the chances in one's own favour. Success alone justifies war. Germany cannot and ought not to leave Russia time to mobilise, for she would then be obliged to maintain on her Eastern frontier so large an army that she would be placed in a position of equality, if not of inferiority, to that of France. Accordingly, added the General, "we must anticipate our principal adversary as soon as there are nine chances to one of going to war, and begin it without delay in order ruthlessly to crush all resistance."

This represents exactly the attitude of military circles and it corresponds to that of political circles; the latter, however, do not consider Russia, in contradistinction to us, as a necessary enemy.

This is what was being thought and said privately a fortnight ago.

From these events the following conclusions may be drawn which comprise the facts stated above; these people are not afraid of war, they fully accept its possibility and they have consequently taken the necessary steps. They wish to be always ready.

As I said, this demands qualities of secrecy, discipline and of persistence, enthusiasm alone is not sufficient. This lesson may form a useful subject of meditation when the Government of the Republic ask Parliament for the means of strengthening the defences of the country.

M. Allizé, Minister of the Republic in Bavaria, to M. Stéphen Pichon, Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Munich, July 10, 1913.

FROM a political point of view people are asking what is the object of the new armaments. Recognising that no one threatens Germany, they consider that German diplomacy had already at its disposal forces sufficiently large and alliances sufficiently powerful to protect German interests with success. As I pointed out the day after the Morocco agreement of 1911, it is thought that the Imperial Chancery will be as incapable, in the future as in the past, of adopting an active foreign policy and of achieving, at least in this sphere, successes which would justify the burdens which the nation has assumed.

This frame of mind is all the more a cause of anxiety as the Imperial Government would find themselves supported by public opinion in any enterprise on which they might energetically embark, even at the risk of a conflict. The state of war to which all the events in the East have accustomed people's minds for the last two years appears no longer like some distant catastrophe, but as a solution of the political and economic difficulties which will continue to increase.

May the example of Bulgaria exercise a salutary influence on Germany. As the Prince Regent recently said to me, "The fortune of war is always uncertain; every war is an adventure, and the man is a fool who risks it believing himself sure of victory."

No. 5.

Report to M. Stéphen Pichon, Minister for Foreign Affairs (on Public Opinion in Germany according to the Reports of the Diplomatic and Consular Agents.)

Paris, July 30, 1913.

FROM observations which our agents in Germany have been able to collect from persons having access to the most diverse circles, it is possible to draw the conclusion that two feelings sway and irritate men's minds:—

(1) The Treaty of the 4th November 1912 is considered a disappointment for Germany;

(2) France—a new France—undreamed of prior to the summer of 1911 is considered to be a warlike country, and to want war.

Members of all the parties in the Reichstag, from the Conservatives to the Socialists, representing the most different districts of Germany, university people from Berlin, Halle, Jena, and Marburg students, elementary school teachers, commercial clerks, bank clerks, bankers, artisans, merchants, manufacturers, doctors, lawyers, editors of Democratic and Socialistic newspapers, Jewish publicists, members of trade unions, clergymen and shopkeepers from the Mark of Brandenburg, country squires from Pomerania and shoemakers from Stettin celebrating the 505th anniversary of their association, country gentlemen, officials, priests, and large farmers from Westphalia, are unanimous on these two points, with very slight differences corresponding to their position in society or their political party. Here is a synthesis of all these opinions:

The Treaty of the 4th November is a diplomatic defeat, a proof of the incapacity of German diplomacy and the carelessness of the Government (so often denounced), a proof that the future of the Empire is not safe without a new Bismark; it is a national humiliation, a lowering in the eyes of Europe, a blow to German prestige, all the more serious because up to 1911, the military supremacy of Germany was unchallenged, and French anarchy and the powerlessness of the Republic were a sort of German dogma.

In July 1911, the "Coup of Agadir" made the Morocco question for the first time a national question affecting the life and expansion of the Empire The revelations and the press campaign which followed, have sufficiently proved how the campaign has been organised, what Pan-German greed it had awakened, and what hatred it had left behind. If the Emperor was discussed, the Chancellor unpopular, Herr von Kiderlen was the best-hated man in Germany last winter. However, he begins to be merely thought little of, for he allows it to be known that he will have his revenge.

Thus, during the summer of 1911, German public opinion became restive when confronted with French opinion with regard to Morocco. And the attitude of France, her calmness, her re-born spiritual unity, her resolution to make good her rights right up to the end, the fact that she has the audacity not to be afraid of war, these things are the most persistent and the gravest cause of anxiety and bad temper on the part of German public opinion.

Why then did not Germany go to war during the summer of 1911, since public opinion, although not so unanimous and determined as French public opinion, was certainly favourable? Apart from the specific disposition of the Emperor and the Chancellor, military and financial reasons made themselves felt.

But these events of 1911 have caused a profound disillusionment in Germany. A new France united, determined, resolved not to be intimidated any longer, has emerged from the shroud in which she had been burying herself for the last ten years. Public opinion in Germany, from December to May, from the columns of the press of all parties, which reproached the Imperial Government for their incapacity and cowardice, has discovered with surprise mingled with irritation that the country conquered in 1870 had never ceased since then to carry on war, to float her flag and maintain the prestige of her arms in Asia and Africa, and to conquer vast territories; that Germany on the other hand had lived on her reputation, that Turkey is the only country in which, during the reign of William II, she had made moral conquests, and these were now compromised by the disgrace of the Morocco solution. Each time that France made a colonial conquest this consolation was offered:—"Yes, but that does not prevent the decadence, anarchy, and dismemberment of France at home."

The public were mistaken and public opinion was misled.

Given this German public opinion that considers France as longing for war, what can be augured for the future as regards the possibility and proximity of war?

German public opinion is divided into two currents on the question of the possibility and proxmity of war.

There are in the country forces making for peace, but they are unorganised and have no popular leaders. They consider that war would be a social misfortune for Germany, and that caste pride, Prussian domination, and the manufacturers of guns and armour plate would get the greatest benefit, but above all that war would profit England.

The forces consist of the following elements:—

The bulk of the workmen, artisans and peasants, who are peace-loving by instinct.

Those members of the nobility detached from military interest and engaged in business, such as the grands seigneurs of Silesia and a few other personages very influential at Court, who are sufficiently enlightened to realise the disastrous political and social consequences of war, even if successful.

Numerous manufacturers, merchants and financiers in a moderate way of business, to whom war, even if successful, would mean bankruptcy, because their enterprises depend on credit, and are chiefly supported by foreign capital.

Poles, inhabitants of Alsace-Lorraine, and Schleswig-Holstein—conquered, but not assimilated and sullenly hostile to Prussian policy. There are about 7,000,000 of these annexed Germans.

Finally, the Governments and the governing classes in the large southern states—Saxony, Bavaria, Wurtemburg, and the Grand Duchy of Baden—are divided by these two opinions:—an unsuccessful war would compromise the Federation from which they have derived great economic advantages; a successful war would only profit Prussia and Prussianisation, against which they have difficulty in defending their political independence and administrative autonomy.

These classes of people either consciously or instinctively prefer peace to war; but they are only a sort of makeweight in political matters with limited influence on public opinion, or they are silent social forces, passive and defenceless against the infection of a wave of warlike feeling.

An example will make this idea clear: The 110 Socialist members of the Reichstag are in favour of peace. They would be unable to prevent war, for war does not depend upon a vote of the Reichstag, and in the presence of such an eventuality the greater part of their number would join the rest of the country in a chorus of angry excitement and enthusiasm.

Finally, it must be observed that these supporters of peace believe in war in the mass because they do not see any other solution for the present situation. In certain contracts, especially in publishers' contracts, a clause has been introduced cancelling the contract in the case of war. They hope, however, that the will of the Emperor on the one side, France's difficulties in Morocco on the other, will be for some time a guarantee of peace. Be that as it may, their pessimism gives free play to those who favour war.

People sometimes speak of a military party in Germany. The expression is inaccurate even if it is intended to convey the idea that Germany is the country where military power is supreme, as it is said of France that it is the country where the civil power is supreme. There exists a state of mind which is more worthy of attention than this historical fact, because it constitutes a danger more evident and more recent. There is a war party, with leaders, and followers, a press either convinced or subsidised for the purpose of creating public opinion; it has means both varied and formidable for the intimidation of the Government. It goes to work in the country with clear ideas, burning aspirations, and a determination that is at once thrilling and fixed.

Those in favour of war are divided into several categories; each of these derives from its social caste its class, its intellectual and moral education, its interests, its hates, special arguments which create a general attitude of mind and increase the strength and rapidity of the stream of warlike desire.

Some want war because in the present circumstances they think it is inevitable. And, as far as Germany is concerned, the sooner the better.

Others regard war as necessary for economic reasons based on over-population, over-production, the need for markets and outlets; or for social reasons, i.e., to provide the outside interests that alone can prevent or retard the rise to power of the democratic and socialist masses.

Others uneasy for the safety of the Empire, and believing that time is on the side of France, think that events should be brought to an immediate head. It is not unusual to meet, in the course of conversation or in the pages of patriotic pamphlets, the vague but deeply rooted conviction that a free Germany and a regenerated France are two historical facts mutually incompatible.

Others are bellicose from "Bismarckism" as it may be termed. They feel themselves humiliated at having to enter into discussions with France, at being obliged to talk in terms of law and right in negotiations and conferences where they have not always found it easy to get right on their side, even when they have a preponderating force. From their still recent past they derive a sense of pride ever fed by personal memories of former exploits, by oral traditions, and by books, and irritated by the events of recent years. Angry disappointment is the unifying force of the Wehrvereine, and other associations of Young Germany.

Others again want war from a mystic hatred of revolutionary France; others finally from a feeling of rancour. These last are the people who heap up pretexts for war.

Coming to actual facts, these feelings take concrete form as follows. The country squires represented in the Reichstag by the Conservative party want at all posts to escape the death duties, which are bound to come if peace continues. In the last sitting of the session which has just closed, the Reichstag agreed to these duties in principle. It is a serious attack on the interests and privileges of the landed gentry. On the other hand, this aristocracy is military in character, and it is instructive to compare the Army List with the year-book of the nobility. War alone can prolong its prestige and support its family interest. During the discussions on the Army Bill, a Conservative speaker put forward the need for promotion among officers as an argument in its favour. Finally, this social class, which forms a hierarchy with the King of Prussia as its supreme head, realises with dread the democratisation of Germany and the increasing power of the Socialist party, and considers its own days numbered. Not only does a formidable movement hostile to agrarian protection threaten its material interests, but, in addition, the number of its political representatives decreases with each legislative period. In the Reichstag of 1878, out of 397 members, 162 belonged to the aristocracy; in 1898, 83; in 1912, 57. Out of this number 27 alone belong to the Right, 14 to the Centre, 7 to the Left, and one sits among the Socialists.

The higher bourgeoisie, represented by the National Liberal Party, the party of the contented spirits, have not the same reasons as the squires for wanting war. With a few exceptions, however, they are bellicose. They have their reasons, social in character.

The higher bourgeoisie is no less troubled than the aristocracy at the democratisation of Germany. In 1871 they had 125 members in the Reichstag; in 1874, 155; in 1887, 99; in 1912, 45. They do not forget that in the years succeeding the war they played the leading rôle in parliament, helping Bismarck in his schemes against the country squires. Uneasily balanced today between conservative instincts and liberal ideas, they look to war to settle problems which their parliamentary representatives are painfully incapable of solving. In addition, doctrinaire manufacturers declare that the difficulties between themselves and their workmen originate in France, the home of revolutionary ideas of freedom: without France industrial unrest would be unknown.

Lastly, there are the manufacturers of guns and armour plate, big merchants who demand bigger markets, bankers who are speculating on the coming of the golden age and the next war indemnity—all these regard war as good business.

Amongst the "Bismarckians" must be reckoned officials of all kinds, represented fairly closely in the Reichstag by the Free Conservatives or Imperial Party. This is the party of the "pensioned" whose impetuous sentiments are poured out in the Post. They find disciples and political sympathisers in the various groups of young men whose minds have been trained and formed in the public schools and universities.

The universities, if we except a few distinguished spirits, develop a warlike philosophy. Economists demonstrate by statistics Germany's need for a colonial and commercial empire commensurate with the industrial output of the Empire. There are sociological fanatics who even go further. The armed peace, so they say, is a crushing burden on the nations, it checks improvement in the lot of the masses, and assists the growth of socialism. France by clinging obstinately to her desire for revenge opposes disarmament. Once for all she must be reduced, for a century, to a state of impotence; that is the best and speediest way of solving the social problem.

Historians, philosophers, political pamphleteers and other apologists of German Kultur wish to impose upon the world a way of thinking and feeling specifically German. They wish to wrest from France that intellectual supremacy which according to the clearest thinkers is still her possession. From this source is derived the phraseology of the Pan-Germans and the ideas and adherents of the Kriegsvereine, Wehrvereine and other similar associations too well-known to need particular description. It is enough to note that the dissatisfaction caused by the treaty of November 4th has considerably swelled the membership of colonial societies.

We come finally to those whose support of the war policy is inspired by rancour and resentment. These are the most dingerous. They are recruited chiefly among diplomatists. German diplomatists are now in very bad odour in public opinion. The most bitter are those who since 1905 have been engaged in the negotiations between France and Germany; they are heaping together and reckoning up their grievances against us, and one day they will present their accounts in the war press. It seems as if they were looking for grievances chiefly in Morocco, though an incident is always possible in any part of the globe where France and Germany are in contact.

They must have their revenge, for they complain that they have been duped. During the discussion on the Army Bill one of these warlike diplomatists exclaimed, "Germany will not be able to have any serious conversation with France until she has every sound man under arms."

In what terms will this conversation be couched? The opinion is fairly widely spread, even in Pan-German circles, that Germany will not declare war in view of the system of defensive alliances and the tendencies of the Emperor. But when the moment comes, she will have to try in every possible way to force France to attack her. Offence will be given, if necessary. That is the Prussian tradition.

Must war then be considered as inevitable?

It is hardly likely that Germany will take the risk, if France can make it clear to the world that the Entente Cordiale and the Russian alliance are not mere diplomatic fictions but realities which exist and will make themselves felt. The English fleet inspires a wholesome terror. It is well-known, however, that victory on sea will leave everything in suspense. On land alone can a decisive issue be obtained.

As for Russia, even though she carries greater weight in political and military circles than was the case three or four years ago, it is not believed that her co-operation will be sufficiently rapid and energetic to be effective.

People's minds are thus getting used to consider the next war as a duel between France and Germany.

No. 6.

M. Jules Cambon, Ambassador of the French Republic at Berlin, to M. Stéphen Pichon, Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Berlin, November 22, 1913.

I HAVE received from an absolutely reliable source an account of a conversation which took place a fortnight ago between the Emperor and the King of the Belgians, in the presence of the Chief of the General Staff—General von Moltke. This conversation, it appears, has made a profound impression on King Albert. I am in no way surprised at the impression he gathered, which corresponds with what I have myself felt for some time. Enmity against us is increasing and the Emperor has ceased to be the friend of peace.

The person addressed by the Emperor had thought up till then, as did all the world, that William II, whose personal influence had been exerted on many critical occasions in support of peace, was still in the same state of mind. He found him this time completely changed. The German Emperor is no longer in his eyes the champion of peace against the warlike tendencies of certain parties in Germany. William II has come to think that war with France is inevitable, and that it must come sooner or later. Naturally he believes in the crushing superiority of the German army and in its certain success.

General von Moltke spoke exactly in the same strain as his sovereign. He, too, declared war to be necessary and inevitable, but he showed himself still more assured of success, "for," he said to the King, "this time the matter must be settled, and your Majesty can have no conception of the irresistible enthusiasm with which the whole German people will be carried away when that day comes."

The King of the Belgians protested that it was a travesty of the intentions of the French Government to interpret them in that sense, and to let oneself be misled as to the sentiments of the French nation by the ebullitions of a few irresponsible spirits or the intrigues of unscrupulous agitators.

The Emperor and his Chief of the General Staff nevertheless persisted in their point of view.

During the course of this conversation the Emperor moreover seemed overstrained and irritable. As William II, advances in years, family traditions, the reactionary tendencies of the Court, and especially the impatience of the soldiers, obtain a greater empire over his mind. Perhaps he feels some slight jealousy of the popularity acquired by his son, who flatters the passions of the Pan-Germans and who does not regard the position occupied by the Empire in the world as commensurate with its power. Perhaps the reply of France to the last increase of the German army, the object of which was to establish the incontestable supremacy of Germany, is, to a certain extent, responsible for his bitterness, for, whatever may be said, it is realised that Germany cannot go much further.

One may well ponder over the significance of this conversation. The Emperor and his Chief of the General Staff may have wished to impress the King of the Belgians and induce him not to make any opposition in the event of a conflict between us. Perhaps Germany would be glad to see Belgium less hostile to certain aspirations lately manifested here with regard to the Belgian Congo, but this last hypothesis does not seem to me to fit in with the interposition of General von Moltke.

For the rest, the Emperor William is less master of his impatience than is usually supposed. I have known him more than once to allow his real thoughts escape him. Whatever may have been the object of the conversation related to me, the revelation is none the less of extreme gravity. It tallies with the precariousness of the general situation and with the state of a certain shade of public opinion in France and Germany.

If I may be allowed to draw a conclusion, I would submit that it would be well to take account of this new factor, namely, that the Emperor is becoming used to an order of ideas which were formerly repugnant to him, and that, to borrow from him a phrase which he likes to use, "we must keep our powder dry."

NEWS has just arrived at Vienna that the Hereditary Archduke of Austria and his wife have been to-day assassinated at Serajevo by a student belonging to Grahovo. Some moments before the attack to which they fell a victim, they had escaped the explosion of a bomb which wounded several officers of their suite.

The Emperor, who is now at Ischl, was immediately informed by telegraph.

THE crime of Serajevo arouses the most acute resentment in Austrian military circles, and among all those who are not content to allow Servia to maintain in the Balkans the position which she has acquired.

The investigation into the origin of the crime which it is desired to exact from the Government at Belgrade under conditions intolerable to their dignity would, in case of a refusal, furnish grounds of complaint which would admit of resort to military measures.

THE Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs told me yesterday, and has to-day repeated to the Russian Ambassador, that he hoped Servia would satisfy the demands which Austria might have to make to her with regard to the investigation and the prosecution of the accomplices in the crime of Serajevo. He added that he was confident that this would be the case because Servia, if she acted in any other way, would have the opinion of the whole civilised world against her.

The German Government do not then appear to share the anxiety which is shown by a part of the German press as to possible tension in the relations between the Governments of Vienna and Belgrade, or at least they do not wish to seem to do so.

IN the course of an interview which he had asked for with the Austro-Hungarian Chargé d'Affaires, M. Sazonof pointed out in a friendly way the disquieting irritation which the attacks of the Austrian press against Servia are in danger of producing in his country.

Count Czernin having given him to understand that the Austro-Hungarian Government would perhaps be compelled to search for the instigators of the crime of Serajevo on Servian territory, M. Sazonof interrupted him: "No country," he said. "has had to suffer more than Russia from crimes prepared on foreign territory. Have we ever claimed to employ in any country whatsoever the procedure with which your papers threaten Servia? Do not embark on such a course."

May this warning not be in vain.

M. d' Apchier le Maugin, French Consul-General at Budapest, to M. René Viviani, President of the Council, Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Budapest, July 11, 1914.

QUESTIONED in the Chamber on the state of the Austro-Servian question, M Tisza explained that before everything else it was necessary to wait for the result of the judicial inquiry, as to which he refused at the moment to make any disclosure whatsoever. And the Chamber has given its full approval to this. He also showed himself equally discreet as to the decisions taken at the meeting of Ministers at Vienna, and did not give any indication whether the project of a démarche at Belgrade, with which all the papers of both hemispheres are full, would be followed up. The Chamber assented without hesitation.

With regard to this démarche it seems that the word has been given to minimise its significance; the anger of the Hungarians has, as it were, evaporated through the virulent articles of the press, which is now unanimous in advising against this step, which might be dangerous. The semi-official press especially would desire that for the word "démarche," with its appearance of a threat, there should be substituted the expression "pourparlers," which appears to them more friendly and more courteous. Thus officially for the moment all is for peace.

All is for peace in the press. But the general public here believes in war and fears it. Moreover, persons in whom I have every reason to have confidence have assured me that they knew that every day cannon and ammunition were being sent in large quantities towards the frontier. Whether true or not, this rumour has been brought to me from various quarters with details which agree with one another; at least it indicates what are the thoughts with which people are generally occupied. The Government, whether it is sincerely desirous of peace, or whether it is preparing a coup, is now doing all that it can to allay these anxieties. This is why the tone of the Government newspapers has been lowered, first by one note, then by two, so that it is at the present moment almost optimistic. But they had themselves spread the alarm as it suited them (à plaiser). Their optimism to order is in fact without an echo; the nervousness of the Bourse, a barometer which cannot be neglected, is a sure proof of this; without exception stocks have fallen to an unaccountably low level; the Hungarian 4 per cents. were quoted yesterday at 79·95, a rate which has never been quoted since they were first issued.

CERTAIN organs of the Vienna press, discussing the military organisation of France and of Russia, represent these two countries as incapable of holding their own in European affairs; this would ensure to the Dual Monarchy, supported by Germany, appreciable facilities for subjecting Servia to any treatment which it might be pleased to impose. The Militärische Rundschau frankly admits it. "The moment is still favourable to us. If we do not decide for war, that war in which we shall have to engage at the latest in two or three years will be begun in far less propitious circumstances. At this moment the initiative rests with us: Russia is not ready, moral factors and right are on our side, as well as might. Since we shall have to accept the contest some day, let us provoke it at once. Our prestige, our position as a Great Power, our honour, are in question; and yet more, for it would seem that our very existence is concerned—to be or not to be—which is in truth the great matter to-day."

Surpassing itself, the Neue Freie Presse of to-day reproaches Count Tisza for the moderation of his second speech, in which he said, "Our relations with Servia require, however, to be made clear." These words rouse its indignation. For it, tranquillity and security can result only from a war to the knife against Pan-Servism, and it is in the name of humanity that it demands the extermination of the cursed Servian race.

Memorandum.

(Extract from a Consular Report on the Economic and Political Situation Austria.)

Vienna, July 20, 1914.

FROM information furnished by a person specially well informed as to official news, it appears that the French Government would be wrong to have confidence in disseminators of optimism; much will be demanded of Servia; she will be required to dissolve several propagandist societies, she will be summoned to repress nationalism, to guard the frontier in co-operation with Austrian officials, to keep strict control over anti-Austrian tendencies in the schools; and it is a very difficult matter for a Government to consent to become in this way a policeman for a foreign Government. They foresee the subterfuges by which Servia will doubtless wish to avoid giving a clear and direct reply; that is why a short interval will perhaps be fixed for her to declare whether she accepts or not. The tenour of the note and its imperious tone almost certainly ensure that Belgrade will refuse. Then military operations will begin.

There is here, and equally at Berlin, a party which accepts the idea of a conflict of widespread dimensions, in other words, a conflagration. The leading idea is probably that it would be necessary to start before Russia has completed the great improvements of her army and railways, and before France has brought her military organisation to perfection. But on this point there is no unanimity in high circles; Count Berchtold and the diplomatists desire at the most localised operations against Servia. But everything must be regarded as possible. A singular fact is pointed out; generally the official telegraph agency, in its summaries and reviews of the foreign press, pays attention only to semi-official newspapers and to the most important organs; it omits all quotation from and all mention of the others. This is a rule and a tradition. Now, for the last ten days the official agency has furnished daily to the Austro-Hungarian press a complete review of the whole Servian press giving a prominent place to the least known, the smallest, and most insignificant papers, which, just on account of their obscurity, employ language freer, bolder, more aggressive, and often, insulting. This work of the official agency has obviously for its aim the excitement of public feeling and the creation of opinion favourable to war. The fact is significant.

Berlin, July 21, 1914.

IT has come to my knowledge that the Servian representative at Berlin declared at the Wilhelmstrasse yesterday that his Government was ready to entertain Austria's requirements arising out of the outrage at Serajevo, provided that she asked only for judicial co-operation in the punishment and prevention of political crimes, but that he was charged to warn the German Government that it would be dangerous to attempt, through that investigation, to lower the prestige of Servia.

In confidence I may also inform your Excellency that the Russian Chargé d'Affaires at the diplomatic audience to-day mentioned this subject to Herr von Jagow. He said that he supposed the German Government now had full knowledge of the note prepared by Austria, and were therefore willing to give the assurance that the Austro-Servian difficulties would be localised. The Secretary of State protested that he was in complete ignorance of the contents of that note, and expressed himself in the same way to me. I could not help showing my astonishment at a statement which agreed so little with what circumstances lead on to expect.

I have also been assured that, from now on, the preliminary notices for mobilisation, the object of which is to place Germany in a kind of "attention" attitude in times of tension, have been set out here to those classes which would receive them in similar circumstances. That is a measure to which the Germans, constituted as they are, can have recourse without indiscretion and without exciting the people. It is not a sensational measure, and is not necessarily followed by full mobilisation, as we have already seen, but it is none the less significant.

I SPECIALLY draw your attention to information of which I am in receipt from Berlin; the French Ambassador notifies the extreme weakness of the Berlin Bourse yesterday, and attributes it to the anxiety which has begun to be aroused by the Servian question.

M. Jules Cambon has very grave reason for believing that when Austria makes the démarche at Belgrade which she judges necessary in consequence of the crime of Serajevo, Germany will support her with her authority, without seeking to play the part of mediator.

M. JULES CAMBON, having questioned Herr von Jagow on the tenour of the Austrian note at Belgrade, the latter replied that he knew nothing of the text; our Ambassador expressed his great astonishment at this. He emphasizes that the weakness of the Berlin Bourse continues, and that pessimistic rumours are current.

M. Barrère also discussed the same question with the Marquis di San Giuliano, who appears disturbed by it, and gives the assurance that he is working at Vienna in order that Servia may not be asked for anything beyond what is practicable, for instance, the dissolution of the Bosnian Club, and not a judicial inquiry into the causes of the crime of Serajevo.

In present circumstances, the most favourable presumption one can make is that the Cabinet at Vienna, finding itself carried away by the press and the military party, is trying to obtain the maximum from Servia by starting to intimidate her, directly and indirectly, and looks to Germany for support in this.

I have asked the French Ambassador at Vienna to use all his influence with Count Berchtold and to represent to him, in a friendly conversation, how much Europe would appreciate moderation on the part of the Austrian Government, and what consequences would be likely to be entailed by violent pressure on Servia.

BIENVENU-MARTIN.

No. 18.

M. Dumaine, French Ambassador at Vienna, to M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Vienna, July 22, 1914.

NOTHING is known as to the decision which Count Berchtold, who is prolonging his stay at Ischl is trying to obtain from the Emperor. The intention of proceeding against Servia with the greatest severity, of having done with her, of "treating her like another Poland," is attributed to the Government. Eight army corps are said to be ready to start on the campaign, but M. Tisza, who is very disturbed about the excitement in Croatia, is said to have intervened actively in order to exercise a moderating influence.

In any case it is believed that the démarche will be made at Belgrade this week. The requirements of the Austro-Hungarian Government with regard to the punishment of the outrage, and to guarantees of control and police supervision, seem to be acceptable to the dignity of the Servians; M. Jovanovich believes they will be accepted. M. Pashitch wishes for a peaceful solution, but says that he is ready for a full resistance. He has confidence in the strength of the Servian army; besides, he counts on the union of all the Slavs in the Monarchy to paralyse the effort directed against his country.

Unless people are absolutely blinded, it must be recognised here that a violent blow has every chance of being fatal, both to the Austro-Hungarian army and to the cohesion of the nationalities governed by the Emperor, which has already been so much compromised.

Herr von Tschirscky, the German Ambassador, is showing himself a supporter of violent measures, while at the same time he is willing to let it be understood that the Imperial Chancery would not be in entire agreement with him on this point. The Russian Ambassador, who left yesterday for the country in consequence of reassuring explanations made to him at the Ministry for Foreign Affairs, has confided to me that his Government will not raise any objection to steps directed towards the punishment of the guilty and the dissolution of the societies which are notoriously revolutionary, but could not accept requirements which would humiliate Servian national feeling.

M. Paul Cambon, French Ambassador at London, to M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs.

London, July 22, 1914.

YOUR Excellency has been good enough to communicate to me the impressions which have been collected by our Ambassador at Berlin with regard to the démarche which the Austro-Hungarian Minister is proposing to make at Belgrade.

These impressions have been confirmed by a conversation which I had yesterday with the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. Sir Edward Grey told me that he had seen the German Ambassador, who stated to him that at Berlin a démarche of the Austro-Hungarian Government to the Servian Government was expected. Prince Lichnowsky assured him that the German Government were endeavouring to hold back and moderate the Cabinet of Vienna, but that up to the present time they had not been successful in this, and that he was not without anxiety as to the result of a démarche of this kind. Sir Edward Grey answered Prince Lichnowsky that he would like to believe that, before intervening at Belgrade, the Austro-Hungarian Government had fully informed themselves as to the circumstances of the conspiracy to which the Hereditary Archduke and the Duchess of Hohenburg had fallen victims, and had assured themselves that the Servian Government had been cognisant of it and had not done all that lay in their power to prevent the consequences. For if it could not be proved that the Servian Government were responsible and implicated to a certain degree, the intervention of Austria-Hungary would not be justified and would arouse against them the opinion of Europe.

The communication of Prince Lichnowsky had left Sir Edward Grey with an impression of anxiety which he did not conceal from me. The same impression was given me by the Italian Ambassador, who also fears the possibility of fresh tension in Austro-Servian relations.

This morning the Servian Minister came to see me, and he shares the apprehensions of Sir Edward Grey. He fears that Austria may make of the Servian Government demands which their dignity, and above all the susceptibility of public opinion, will not allow them to accept without a protest. When I pointed out to him the quiet which appears to reign at Vienna, and to which all the Ambassadors accredited to that Court bear testimony, he answered that this official quiet was only apparent and concealed feelings which were most fundamentally hostile to Servia. But, he added, if these feelings take a public form (démarche) which lacks the moderation that is desirable, it will be necessary to take account of Servian public opinion, which has been inflamed by the wrong methods which the Austrian Government have used in approaching that country, and which has been made less patient by the memory of two victorious wars which is still quite fresh. Notwithstanding the sacrifices which Servia has made for her recent victories she can still put 400,000 men in the field, and public opinion, which knows this, is not inclined to put up with any humiliation.

Sir Edward Grey, in an interview with the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador, asked him to recommend his Government not to depart from the prudence and moderation necessary for avoiding new complications, not to demand from Servia any measures to which she could not reasonably submit and not to allow themselves to be carried away too far.

ACCORDING to information collected by the French Ambassador at Vienna, the first intention of the Austro-Hungarian Government had been to proceed with the greatest severity against Servia, while keeping eight army corps ready to start operations.

The disposition at this moment was more conciliatory; in answer to a question put to him by M. Dumaine, whom I instructed to call the attention of the Austro-Hungarian Government to the anxiety aroused in Europe, Baron Macchio stated to our Ambassador that the tone of the Austrian note, and the demands which would be formulated in it, allow us to count on a peaceful result. In view of the customary procedure of the Imperial Chancery, I do not know what confidence ought to be placed in these assurances.

In any case the Austrian note will be presented in a very short space of time. The Servian Minister holds that as M. Pashitch wishes to come to an understanding, he will accept those demands which relate to the punishment of the outrage and to the guarantees for control and police supervision, but that he will resist everything which might affect the sovereignty and dignity of his country.

In diplomatic circles at Vienna the German Ambassador is in favour of violent measures, while at the same time he confesses that the Imperial Chancery is perhaps not entirely in agreement with him on this point; the Russian Ambassador, trusting to assurances which have been given him, has left Vienna, and before his departure confided to M. Dumaine that his Government will not raise any objection to the punishment of the guilty and the dissolution of the revolutionary associations, but that they could not accept requirements which were humiliating to the national sentiment of Servia.

THE Bavarian press seems to believe that a peaceful solution of the Austro-Servian incident is not only possible but even probable; on the other hand, official circles have for some time been assuming with more or less sincerity an air of real pessimism.

In particular the President of the Council said to me to-day that the Austrian note the contents of which were known to him (dont il avait connaissance) was, in his opinion, drawn up in terms which could be accepted by Servia, but that none the less the existing situation appeared to him to be very serious.

CHAPTER III.

THE AUSTRIAN NOTE AND THE SERVIAN REPLY.

(From Friday, July 24, to Saturday, July 25.)

No. 22.

M. René Viviani, President of the Council, to M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs.

I SHOULD be obliged if you would urgently send on to M. Dumaine the following information and instructions.

Reval, July 24, 1914, 1 A.M.

In the course of my conversation with the Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs we had to take into consideration the dangers which might result from any step taken by Austria-Hungary in relation to Servia in connection with the crime of which the Hereditary Archduke has been a victim. We found ourselves in agreement in thinking that we should not leave anything undone to prevent a request for an explanation or some mise en demeure which would be equivalent to intervention in the internal affairs of Servia, of such a kind that Servia might consider it as an attack on her sovereignty and independence.

We have in consequence come to the opinion that we might, by means of a friendly conversation with Count Berchtold, give him counsels of moderation of such a kind as to make him understand how undesirable would be any intervention at Belgrade which would appear to be a treat on the part of the Cabinet at Vienna.

The British Ambassador, who was kept informed by M. Sazonof, expressed the idea that his Government would doubtless associate itself with a démarche for removing any danger which might threaten general peace, and he has telegraphed to his Government to this effect.

M. Sazonof has addressed instructions to this effect to M. Schebeko. While there is no question in this of collective or concerted action at Vienna on the part of the representatives of the Triple Entente, I ask you to discuss the matter with the Russian and English Ambassadors, and to come to an agreement with them as to the best means by which each of you can make Count Berchtold understand without delay the moderation that the present situation appears to us to require.

Further, it would be desirable to ask M. Paul Cambon to bring the advantages of this procedure to the notice of Sir Edward Grey, and to support the suggestion that the British Ambassador in Russia will have made to this effect to the Foreign Office. Count Benckendorff is instructed to make a similar recommendation.

No. 23.

M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, to M. René Viviani, President of the Council, on board the "France."

Paris, July 24, 1914.

I HAVE sent on your instructions to Vienna as urgent, but from information contained in this morning's papers it appears that the Austrian note was presented at Belgrade at 6 o'clock yesterday evening.

This note, the official text of which has not yet been handed to us by the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador, appears to be very sharp; it appears to aim not only at obtaining the prosecution of the Serbs who were directly implicated in the outrage of Serajevo but to require the immediate suppression of the whole of the anti-Austrian propaganda in the Servian press and army. It is said to give Servia till 6 o'clock on Saturday evening to make her submission.

In sending your instructions to M. Dumaine I requested him to come to an agreement with his English and Russian colleagues as to his action.

No. 24.

Text of the Austrian Note.

(Note communicated by Count Scezsen, Austro-Hungarian Ambassador, to M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, on Friday, July 24th, 1914, at 10-30 a.m.)

Vienna, July 24, 1914.

THE Austro-Hungarian Government felt compelled to address the following note to the Servian Government on the 23rd July, through the medium of the Austro-Hungarian Minister at Belgrade :—

" On the 31st March, 1909, the Servian Minister in Vienna, on the instructions of the Servian Government, made the following declaration to the Imperial and Royal Government :—

" ' Servia recognises that the fait accompli regarding Bosnia has not affected her rights, and consequently she will conform to the decisions that the powers may take in conformity with article 25 of the Treaty of Berlin. In deference to the advice of the Great Powers, Servia undertakes to renounce from now onwards the attitude of protests and opposition which she has adopted with regard to the annexation since last autumn. She undertakes, moreover, to modify the direct on of her policy with regard to Austria-Hungary and to live in future on good neighbourly terms with the latter.'

" The history of recent years, and in particular the painful events of the 28th June last, have shown the existence of a subversive movement with the object of detaching a part of the territories of Austria-Hungary from the Monarchy. The movement, which had its birth under the eye of the Servian Government, has gone so far as to make itself manifest on both sides of the Servian frontier in the shape of acts of terrorism and a series of outrages and murders.

" Far from carrying out the formal undertakings contained in the declaration of the 31st March, 1909, the Royal Servian Government has done nothing to repress these movements. It has permitted the criminal machinations of various societies and associations directed against the Monarchy, and has tolerated unrestrained language on the part of the press, the glorification of the perpetrators of outrages, and the participation of officers and functionaries in subversive agitation. It has permitted an unwholesome propaganda in public instruction, in short, it has permitted all manifestations of a nature to incite the Servian population to hatred of the Monarchy and contempt of its institutions.

" This culpable tolerance of the Royal Servian Government had not ceased at the moment when the events of the 28th June last proved its fatal consequences to the whole world.

" It results from the depositions and confessions of the criminal prepetrators of the outrage of the 28th June that the Serajevo assassinations were planned in Belgrade; that the arms and explosives with which the murderers were provided had been given to them by Servian officers and functionaries belonging to the Narodna Odbrana; and finally, that the passage into Bosnia of the criminals and their arms was organised and effected by the chiefs of the Servian frontier service.

" The above-mentioned results of the magisterial investigation do not permit the Austro Hungarian Government to pursue any longer the attitude of expectant forbearance which they have maintained for years in face of the machinations hatched in Belgrade, and thence propagated in the territories of the Monarchy. The results, on the contrary, impose on them the duty of putting an end to the intrigues which form a perpetual menace to the tranquillity of the Monarchy,

" To achieve this end the Imperial and Royal Government see themselves compelled to demand from the Royal Servian Government a formal assurance that they condemn this dangerous propaganda against the Monarchy, in other words, the whole series of tendencies, the ultimate aim of which is to detach from the Monarchy territories belonging to it, and that they undertake to suppress by every means this criminal and terrorist propaganda.

" In order to give a formal character to this undertaking the Royal Servian Government shall publish on the front page of their ' Official Journal ' of the 13-26 July the following declaration :—

" ' The Royal Government of Servia condemn the propaganda directed against Austria-Hungary—i.e., the general tendency of which the final aim is to detach from the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy territories belonging to it, and they sincerely deplore the fatal consequences of these criminal proceedings.

"'The Royal Government regret that Servian officers and functionaries participated in the above-mentioned propaganda and thus compromised the good neighbourly relations to which the Royal Government were solemnly pledged by their declaration of the 31st March, 1909.

"'The Royal Government who disapprove and repudiate all idea of interfering or attempting to interfere with the destinies of the inhabitants of any part whatsoever of Austria-Hungary, consider it their duty formally to warn officers and functionaries, and the whole population of the Kingdom, that henceforward they will proceed with the utmost rigour against persons who may be guilty of such machinations, which they will use all their efforts to anticipate and suppress.'

'This declaration shall simultaneously be communicated to the Royal army as an order of the day by His Majesty the King and shall be published in the 'Official Bulletin' of the army.

"The Royal Servian Government further undertake :

"(1) To suppress any publication which incites to hatred and contempt of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy and the general tendency of which is directed against its territorial integrity ;

"(2) To dissolve immediately the society styled 'Narodna Odbrana,' to confiscate all its means of propaganda, and to proceed in the same manner against other societies and their branches in Servia which engage in propaganda against the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy. The Royal Government shall take the necessary measures to prevent the societies dissolved from continuing their activity under another name and form ;

"(3) To eliminate without delay from public instruction in Servia, both as regards the teaching body and also as regards the methods of instruction, everything that serves, or might serve, to foment the propaganda against Austria-Hungary ;

"(4) To remove from the military service, and from the administration in general, all officers and functionaries guilty of propaganda against the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy whose names and deeds the Austro-Hungarian Government reserve to themselves the right of communicating to the Royal Government ;

"(5) To accept the collaboration in Servia of representatives of the Austro-Hungarian Government for the suppression of the subversive movement directed against the territorial integrity of the Monarchy ;

"(6) To take judicial proceedings against accessories to the plot of the 28th June who are on Servian territory ; delegates of the Austro-Hungarian Government will take part in the investigation relating thereto ;

"(7) To proceed without delay to the arrest of Major Voija Tankositch and of the individual name Milan Ciganovitch, a Servian State employé, who have been compromised by the results of the magisterial enquiry at Serajevo ;

"(8) To prevent by effective measures the co-operation of the Servian authorities in the illicit traffic in arms and explosives across the frontier, to dismiss and punish severely the officials of the frontier service at Schabatz Loznica guilty of having assisted the perpetrators of the Serajevo crime by facilitating their passage across the frontier ;

"(9) To furnish the Imperial and Royal Government with explanations regarding the unjustifiable utterances of high Servian officials, both in Servia and abroad, who, notwithstanding their official position, have not hesitated since the crime of the 28th June to express themselves in interviews in terms of hostility to the Austro-Hungarian Government ; and, finally,

"(10) To notify the Imperial and Royal Government without delay of the execution of the measures comprised under the preceding heads.

"The Austro-Hungarian Government expect the reply of the Royal Government at the latest by 5 o'clock on Saturday evening, the 25th July."*

"A memorandum dealing with the results of the magisterial enquiry at Serajevo with regard to the officials mentioned under heads (7) and (8) is attached to this note."

I have the honour to request your Excellency to bring the contents of this note to the knowledge of the Government to which you are accredited, accompanying your communication with the following observations:—

On the 31st March 1909, the Royal Servian Government addressed to Austria-Hungary the declaration of which the text is reproduced above.

On the very day after this declaration Servia embarked on a policy of instilling revolutionary ideas into the Serb subjects of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, and so preparing for the separation of the Austro-Hungarian territory on the Servian frontier.

Servia became the centre of a criminal agitation.

No time was lost in the formation of societies and groups, whose object, either avowed or secret, was the creation of disorders on Austro-Hungarian territory. These societies and groups count among their members, generals and diplomatists, Government officials and judges—in short, men at the top of official and unofficial society in the kingdom.

Servian journalism is almost entirely at the service of this propaganda, which is directed against Austria-Hungary, and not a day passes without the organs of the Servian press stirring up their readers to hatred or contempt for the neighbouring Monarchy, or to outrages directed more or less openly against its security and integrity.

A large number of agents are employed in carrying on by every means the agitation against Austria-Hungary and corrupting the youth in the frontier provinces.

Since the recent Balkan crisis there has been a recrudescence of the spirit of conspiracy inherent in Servian politicians, which has left such sanguinary imprints on the history of the kingdom; individuals belonging formerly to bands employed in Macedonia have come to place themselves at the disposal of the terrorist propaganda against Austria-Hungary.

In the presence of these doings, to which Austria-Hungary has been exposed for years, the Servian Government have not thought it incumbent on them to take the slightest step. The Servian Government have thus failed in the duty imposed on them by the solemn declaration of the 31st March 1909, and acted in opposition to the will of Europe and the undertaking given to Austria-Hungary.

The patience of the Imperial and Royal Government in the face of the provocative attitude of Servia was inspired by the territorial disinterestedness of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy and the hope that the Servian Government would end in spite of everything by appreciating Austria-Hungary's friendship at its true value. By observing a benevolent attitude towards the political interests of Servia, the Imperial and Royal Government hoped that the kingdom would finally decide to follow an analogous line of conduct on its own side. In particular, Austria-Hungary expected a development of this kind in the political ideas of Servia, when, after the events of 1912, the Imperial and Royal Government, by its disinterested and ungrudging attitude, made such a considerable aggrandisement of Servia possible.

The benevolence which Austria-Hungary showed towards the neighbouring State had no restraining effect on the proceedings of the Kingdom, which continued to tolerate on its territory a propaganda of which the fatal consequences were demonstrated to the whole world on the 20th June last, when the Heir Presumptive

* The Austro-Hungarian Ambassador in a private letter on the 24th July sent to the Minister for Foreign Affairs the following correction:—

"In the copy of the dispatch which I had the honour to send to your Excellency this morning, it was said that my Government expected an answer from the Cabinet at Belgrade at latest by 5 o'clock on the evening of Saturday, the 25th of this month. As our Minister at Belgrade did not deliver his note yesterday until 6 o'clock in the evening, the time allowed for the answer has in consequence been prolonged to 6 o'clock to-morrow Saturday evening.

"I consider it my duty to inform your Excellency of this slight alteration in the termination of the period fixed for the answer to the Servian Government." to the Monarchy and his illustrious consort fell victims to a plot hatched at Belgrade.

In the presence of this state of things the Imperial and Royal Government have felt compelled to take new and urgent steps at Belgrade with a view to inducing the Servian Government to stop the incendiary movement that is threatening the security and integrity of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy.

The Imperial and Royal Government are convinced that in taking this step they will find themselves in full agreement with the sentiments of all civilised nations, who cannot permit regicide to become a weapon that can be employed with impunity in political strife, and the peace of Europe to be continually disturbed by movements emanating from Belgrade.

In support of the above the Imperial and Royal Government hold at the disposal of the British Government a dossier elucidating the Servian intrigues and the connection between these intrigues and the murder of the 28th June.

An identical communication has been addressed to the Imperial and Royal representatives accredited to the other signatory Powers.

You are authorised to leave a copy of this despatch in the hands of the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

APPENDIX.

THE criminal enquiry opened by the Court of Serajevo against Gavrilo Princip and his accessories in and before the act of assassination committed by them on the 28th June last has up to the present led to the following conclusions:—

(1) The plot, having as its object the assassination of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand at the time of his visit to Serajevo, was formed at Belgrade by Gavrilo Princip, Nedeljke Cabrinovic, one Milan Ciganovic and Trifko Grabez, with the assistance of Commander Voija Tankosic.

(2) The six bombs and the four Browning pistols and ammunition with which the guilty parties committed the act were delivered to Princip, Cabrinovic and Grabez by the man Milan Ciganovic and Commander Voija Tankosic at Belgrade

(3) The bombs are hand-grenades coming from the arms depôt of the Servian army at Kragujevac.

(4) In order to ensure the success of the act, Ciganovic taught Princip, Cabrinovic, and Grabez how to use the bombs, and gave lessons in firing Browning pistols to Princip and Grabez in a forest near the shooting ground at Topschider.

(5) To enable Princip, Cabrinovic, and Grabez to cross the frontier of Bosnia-Herzegovina and smuggle in their contraband of arms secretly, a secret system of transport was organised by Ciganovic.

By this arrangement the introduction into Bosnia-Herzegovina of criminals and their arms was effected by the officials controlling the frontiers at Chabac (Rade Popovic) and Loznica, as well as by the customs officer Rudivoj Grbic, of Loznica, with the assistance of various individuals.

No. 25.

M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, to M. René Viviani, President of the Council, on board the "France," and to London, Berlin, Vienna, St. Petersburgh, Rome, Belgrade.

Paris, July 24, 1914.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador this morning left me a copy of the Austrian note which was handed in at Belgrade on Thursday evening. Count Scézsen informs me that the Austro-Hungarian Government gives the Servian Government up to 5 o'clock on the evening of Saturday the 25th for their answer.

The note is based on the undertaking made by Servia on the 31st March 1909, to recognise the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and reproaches the Servian Government with having tolerated an anti-Austrian propaganda in which officials, the army, and the press have taken part, a propaganda which threatens the security and integrity of Austria, and the danger of which has been shown by the crime of the 28th June, which, according to the facts established during the investigation, was planned at Belgrade.

The Austrian Government explain that they are compelled to put an end to a propaganda which forms a permanent danger to their tranquillity, and to require from the Servian Government an official pronouncement of their determination to condemn and suppress it, by publishing in the official Gazette of the 26th a declaration, the terms of which are given, condemning it, stating their regret, and threatening to crush it. A general order of the King to the Servian army is at the same time to make these declarations known to the army. In addition to this, the Servian Government are to undertake to suppress publications, to dissolve the societies, to dismiss those officers and civil servants whose names would be communicated to them by the Austrian Government, to accept the co-operation of Austrian officials in suppressing the subversive acts to which their attention has been directed as well as for the investigation into the crime of Serajevo, and finally to proceed to the immediate arrest of a Servian officer and an official who were concerned in it.

Annexed to the Austrian memorandum is a note which sums up the facts established by the investigation into the crime of Serajevo, and declares that it was planned at Belgrade; that the bombs were provided for the murderers, and came from a depôt of the Servian Army; finally that the murderers were drilled and helped by Servian officers and officials.

On visiting the Acting Political Director immediately after making this communication, Count Scézsen without any observations informed him that the note had been presented. M. Berthelot, on my instructions, confined himself to pointing out to the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador the feeling of anxiety which had been aroused by the information available this morning as to the contents of the Austrian note, and the painful feeling which could not fail to be aroused in French public opinion by the time chosen for so categorical a démarche with so short a time-limit; that is to say, a time when the President of the Republic and the President of the Council and Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic had left St. Petersburgh and were at sea and consequently were not able to exert, in agreement with those Powers which were not directly interested, that soothing influence on Servia and Austria which was so desirable in the interest of general peace.

The Servian Minister has not yet received any information as to the intentions of his Government.

The German Ambassador has asked me to receive him at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, to M. Thiébaut, French Minister at Stockholm (for the President of the Council), and to Belgrade, Vienna, London, Berlin, Rome, St. Petersburgh.

Paris, July 24, 1914.

M. VESNITCH was this morning still without any telegram from his Government informing him as to their intentions, and did not know the contents of the Austrian note.

To a request for advice which he made to the Political Director, M. Berthelot said to him, speaking personally and for himself alone, that Servia must try to gain time, as the limit of forty-eight hours perhaps formed rather a "mise en demeure" than an ultimatum in the proper sense of the term; that there might, for instance, be an opportunity of offering satisfaction on all those points which were not inconsistent with the dignity and sovereignty of Servia; he was advised to draw attention to the fact that statements based on the Austrian investigations at Serajevo were one-sided, and that Servia, while she was quite ready to take measures against all the accomplices of a crime which she most strongly condemned required full information as to the evidence in order to be able to verify it with all speed; above all, to attempt to escape from the direct grip of Austria by declaring herself ready to submit to the arbitration of Europe.

I have asked at London and St. Petersburgh for the views and intentions of the English and Russian Governments. It appears on the other hand from our information that the Austrian note was not communicated to Italy until to-day, and that Italy had neither been consulted nor even informed of it.

Paris, July 24, 1914.

THE French Ambassador at Vienna informs me that opinion has been startled by the sudden and exaggerated nature of the Austrian demands, but that the chief fear of the military party appears to be that Servia may give way.

The Servian Minister in Austria thinks that his Government will show themselves very conciliatory in all that concerns the punishment of the accomplices of the crime, and the guarantees to be given as to the suppression of the anti-Austrian propaganda, but that they could not accept a general order to the army dictated to the King nor the dismissal of officers who were suspected by Austria, nor the interference of foreign officials in Servia. M. Jovanovitch considers that, if it were possible to start a discussion, a settlement of the dispute might still be arranged, with the assistance of the Powers.

Our Ambassador at Berlin gives an account of the excitement aroused by the Austrian note, and of the state of feeling of the Russian Chargé d'Affaires, who thinks that a large part of opinion in Germany would desire war. The tone of the press is threatening and appears to have as its object the intimidation of Russia. Our Ambassador is to see Herr von Jagow this evening.

M. Barrère informs us that Italy is exercising moderating influence at Vienna and is trying to avoid complications.

Paris, July 24, 1914.

HERR VON SCHOEN came to inform me of a note from his Government, of which he would not leave me a copy, but at my request he read it twice over to me.

The note was almost word for word as follows:—

"The statements of the Austro-Hungarian newspapers concerning the circumstances under which the assassination of the Austrian heir-presumptive and his consort has taken place disclose unmistakably the aims which the Pan-Servian propaganda has set itself, and the means it employs to realise them. The facts made known must also do away with all doubt that the centre of activity of all those tendencies which are directed towards the detachment of the Southern Slav provinces from the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy and their incorporation into the Servian Kingdom is to be found in Belgrade, and is, at any rate, at work there, with the connivance of members of the Government and the Army.

"The Servian intrigues have been going on for many years. In an especially marked form the Pan-Servian chauvinism manifested itself during the Bosnian crisis. It was only owing to the moderation and far-reaching self-restraint of the Austro-Hungarian Government and to the energetic intervention of the Great Powers that the Servian provocations to which Austria-Hungary was then exposed did not lead to a conflict. The assurance of good conduct in future which was given by the Servian Government at that time has not been kept. Under the eyes, at least with the tacit permission, of official Servia, the Pan-Servian propaganda has, since that time, continuously increased in extension and intensity. To its account must be set the recent crime, the threads of which lead to Belgrade. It has become clearly evident that it would not be consistent either with the dignity or with the self-preservation of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy to remain longer inactive in face of this movement on the other side of the frontier, by which the security and the integrity of her territories are constantly menaced. Under these circumstances, the course of procedure and demands of the Austro-Hungarian Government can only be regarded as justified. In spite of that, the attitude which public opinion as well as the Government in Servia have recently adopted does not exclude the apprehension that the Servian Government might refuse to comply with those demands, and might even allow themselves to be carried away into a provocative attitude towards Austria-Hungary. The Austro-Hungarian Government, if they do not wish definitely to abandon Austria's position as a Great Power, would then have no choice but to obtain the fulfilment of their demands from the Servian Government by strong pressure and, if necessary, by using military measures, the choice of the means having to be left to them."

The German Ambassador particularly called my attention to the last two paragraphs of his note before reading it, pressing the point that this was the important matter I noted down the text literally; it is as follows:—"The German Government consider that in the present case there is only question of a matter to be settled exclusively between Austria-Hungary and Servia, and that the Great Powers ought seriously to endeavour to restrict it to those two immediately concerned."

"The German Government desire urgently the localisation of the dispute, because every interference of another Power would, owing to the natural play of alliances be followed by incalculable consequences."

I called the German Ambassador's attention to the fact that while it might appear legitimate to demand the punishment of all those who were implicated in the crime of Serajevo, on the other hand it seemed difficult to require measures which could not be accepted, having regard to the dignity and sovereignty of Servia; the Servian Government, even if it was willing to submit to them would risk being carried away by a revolution.

I also pointed out to Herr von Schoen that his note only took into account two hypotheses: that of a pure and simple refusal or that of a provocative attitude on the part of Servia: The third hypothesis (which would leave the door open for an arrangement) should also be taken into consideration; that of Servia's acceptance and of her agreeing at once to give full satisfaction for the punishment of the accomplices and full guarantees for the suppression of the anti-Austrian propaganda so far as they were compatible with her sovereignty and dignity.

I added that if within these limits the satisfaction desired by Austria could be admitted, the means of obtaining it could be examined; if Servia gave obvious proof of good will it could not be thought that Austria would refuse to take part in the conversation.

Perhaps they should not make it too difficult for third Powers, who could not either morally or sentimentally cease to take interest in Servia, to take an attitude which was in accord with the wishes of Germany to localise the dispute.

Herr von Schoen recognised the justice of these considerations and vaguely stated that hope was always possible. When I asked him if we should give to the Austrian note the character of a simple mise en demeure, which permitted a discussion, or an ultimatum, he answered that personally he had no views.

M. Jules Cambon, French Ambassador at Berlin, to M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Berlin, July 24, 1914.

The delivery of the Austrian note to Servia has made a deep impression.

The Austrian Ambassador declares that his Government could not abate any of their demands. At the Wilhelmstrasse, as well as in the press, the same view is expressed.

Most of the Charges d'Affaires present in Berlin came to see me this morning. They show little hope of a peaceful issue. The Russian Charge d'Affaires bitterly remarked that Austria has presented her note at the very moment that the President of the Republic and the President of the Council had left St. Petersbugh. He is inclined to think that a considerable section of opinion in Germany desires war and would like to seize this opportunity: in which Austria will no doubt be found more united than in the past, and in which the German Emperor, influenced by a desire to give support to the monarchic principle (par un sentiment de solidarite monarchique), and by horror at the crime, is less inclined to show a conciliatory attitude.

Herr von Jagow is going to receive me late in the afternoon.

JULES CAMBON.

No. 30.

M. Jules Cambon, Ambassador of the French Republic at Berlin, to M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Berlin, July 24, 1914.

I ASKED the Secretary of State to-day, in the interview which I had with him, if it was correct, as announced in the newspapers, that Austria had presented a note to the Powers on her dispute with Servia; if he had received it; and what view he took of it.

Herr von Jagow answered me in the affirmative, adding that the note was forcible, and that he approved it, the Servian Government having for a long time past wearied the patience of Austria. Moreover, he considers this question to be a domestic one for Austria, and he hopes that it will be localised.

I then said to him that not having as yet received any instructions, the views which I wished to exchange with him were strictly personal. Thereupon I asked him if the Berlin Cabinet had really been entirely ignorant of Austria's requirements before they were communicated to Belgrade, and as he told me that that was so, I showed him my surprise at seeing him thus undertake to support claims, of whose limit and scope he was ignorant.

Herr von Jagow interrupted me, and said, "It is only because we are having a personal conversation that I allow you to say that to me."

"Certainly," I replied, "but if Peter I. humiliates himself, domestic trouble will probably break out in Servia; that will open the door to fresh possibilities, and do you know where you will be led by Vienna?" I added that the language of the German newspapers was not the language of persons who were indifferent to, and unacquainted with, the question, but betokened an active support. Finally, I remarked that the shortness of the time limit given to Servia for submission would make an unpleasant impression in Europe.

Herr von Jagow answered that he quite expected a little excitement (un peu d'emotion) on the part of Servia's friends, but that he was counting on their giving her wise advice.

"I have no doubt," I then said to him, "that Russia would endeavour to persuade the Cabinet of Belgrade to make acceptable concessions, but why not ask from one what is being asked from the other, and if reliance is being placed on advice being given at Belgrade, is it not also legitimate to rely on advice being given at Vienna from another quarter?"

The Secretary of State went so far as to say that that depended on circumstances; but immediately checked himself; he repeated that the difficulty must be localised. He asked me if I really thought the situation serious. "Certainly," I answered, "because if what is happening is the result of due reflection, I do not understand why all means of retreat have been cut off."

All the evidence shows that Germany is ready to support Austria's attitude with unusual energy. The weakness which her Austro-Hungarian ally has shown for some years past has weakened the confidence that was placed in her here. She was found heavy to drag along. Mischievous legal proceedings, such as the Agram and the Friedjung affairs, brought odium on her police and covered them with ridicule. All that was asked of the police was that they should be strong; the conviction is that they were violent.

An article which appeared in the Lokal Anzeiger this evening shows also that at the German Chancery there exists a state of mind to which we in Paris are naturally not inclined to pay sufficient attention, I mean the feeling that monarchies must stand together (sentiment de in solidarite monarchique). I am convinced that great weight must be attached to the point of view in order to appreciate the attitude of the Emperor William, whose impressionable nature must have been affected by the assassination of a prince whose guest he had been a few days previously.

It is not less striking to notice the pains with which Herr von Jagow, and all the officials placed under his orders pretend to every one that they were ignorant of the scope of the note sent by Austria to Servia.

THE Austro-Hungarian Ambassador has communicated to M. Sazonof a threatening note to Servia.

The intentions of the Emperor of Russia and his Ministers could not be more pacific, a fact of which the President of the Republic and the President of the Council have been able to satisfy themselves directly; but the ultimatum which the Austro-Hungarian Government has just delivered to the Cabinet at Belgrade introduces a new and disquieting element into the situation.

Public opinion in Russia would not allow Austria to offer violence to Servia. The shortness of the time limit fixed by the ultimatum renders still more difficult the moderating influence that the Powers of the Triple Entente might exercise at Vienna.

On the other hand, M. Sazonof assumes that Germany will desire to support her ally and I am afraid that this impression is correct. Nothing but the assurance of the solidarity of the Triple Entente can prevent the German Powers from emphasising their provocative attitude.

M. Paul Cambon, French Ambassador at London, to M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs.

London, July 24, 1914.

SIR EDWARD GREY having discussed with me his desire to leave no stone unturned to avert the crisis, we agreed in thinking that the English Cabinet might ask the German Government to take the initiative in approaching Vienna with the object of offering the mediation, between Austria and Servia, of the four Powers which are not directly interested. If Germany agrees, time will be gained, and this is the essential point.

Sir Edward Grey told me that he would discuss with Prince Lichnowsky the proposal I have just explained. I mentioned the matter to my Russian colleague, who is afraid of a surprise from Germany, and who imagines that Austria would not have despatched her ultimatum without previous agreement with Berlin.

Count Benckendorff told me that Prince Lichnowsky, when he returned from leave about a month ago, had intimated that he held pessimistic views regarding the relations between St. Petersburgh and Berlin. He had observed the uneasiness caused in this latter capital by the rumours of a naval entente between Russia and England, by the Tsar's visit to Bucharest, and by the strengthening of the Russian Army. Count Benckendorff had concluded from this that a war with Russia would be looked upon without disfavour in Germany.

The Under-Secretary of State has been struck, as all of us have been, by the anxious looks of Prince Lichnowsky since his return from Berlin, and he considers that if Germany had wished to do so she could have stopped the dispatch of the ultimatum.

The situation, therefore, is as grave as it can be, and we see no way of arresting the course of events.

However, Count Benckendorff thinks it right to attempt the démarche upon which I have agreed with Sir Edward Grey.

M. Paul Cambon, French Ambassador at London, to M. BienvenuM-artin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs.

London, July 24, 1914.

THE Servian Minister received to-night from M. Pashitch a telegram saying that the Austro-Hungarian Government had sent him their ultimatum, the time limit of which expires at 6 o'clock to-morrow, Saturday evening. M. Pashitch does not give the terms of the Austrian communication but if it is of the nature reported in to-day's "Times," it seems impossible for the Servian Government to accept it.

In consultation with my Russian colleague, who thinks it extremely difficult for his Government not to support Servia, we have been asking ourselves what intervention could avert the conflict.

Sir Edward Grey having summoned me for this afternoon, I propose to suggest that he should ask for the semi-official intervention of the German Government at Vienna to prevent a sudden attack.

M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, to Stockholm (for the President of the Council), Belgrade, St. Petersburgh, Berlin, Vienna, Rome.

Paris, July 24, 1914.

THE Austrian Ambassador having communicated his Government's note to Sir Edward Grey, the latter observed that no such formidable declaration had ever been addressed by one Government to another; he drew Count Mensdorff's attention to the responsibility assumed by Austria.

With the possibility of a conflict between Austria and Russia before him, Sir Edward Grey proposes to ask for the co-operation of the German Government with a view to the mediation of the four Powers who are not directly interested in the Servian question, namely, England, France, Italy and Germany; this mediation to be exercised simultaneously at Vienna and at St. Petersburgh.

I advised the Servian Minister to act cautiously, and I am willing to co-operate in any conciliatory action at Vienna, in the hope that Austria will not insist on the acceptance of all her demands as against a small State, if the latter shows herself ready to give every satisfaction which is considered compatible with her independence and her sovereignty.

Berlin, July 25, 1914.

THE Belgian Minister appears very anxious about the course of events.

He is of opinion that Austria and Germany have desired to take advantage of the fact that, owing to a combination of circumstances at the present moment, Russia and England appear to them to be threatened by domestic troubles, while in France the military law is under discussion. Moreover, he does not believe in the pretended ignorance of the Government of Berlin on the subject of Austria's démarche.

He thinks that if the form of it has not been submitted to the Cabinet at Berlin, the moment of its despatch has been cleverly chosen in consultation with that Cabinet, in order to surprise the Triple Entente at a moment of disorganisation.

He has seen the Italian Ambassador, who has just interrupted his holiday in order to return. It looks as if Italy would be surprised, to put it no higher, at having been kept out of the whole affair by her two allies.

M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, to Stockholm (for the President of the Council), and to London, Berlin, St. Petersburgh, Vienna.

Paris, July 25, 1914.

THE German Ambassador came at 12 o'clock to protest against an article in the Echo de Paris which applied the term "German threat" (menace allemande) to his démarche of yesterday. Herr von Schoen told a certain number of journalists, and came to state at the Direction Politique, that there has been no "concert" between Austria and Germany in connection with the Austrian note, and that the German Government had no knowledge of this note when it was communicated to them at the same time as to the other Powers, though they had approved it subsequently.

Baron von Schoen added, moreover, that there was no "threat"; the German Government had merely indicated that they thought it desirable to localise the dispute, and that the intervention of other Powers ran the risk of aggravating it.

The Acting Political Director took note of Baron von Schoen's démarche. Having asked him to repeat the actual terms of the last two paragraphs of his note, he remarked to him that the terms showed the willingness of Germany to act as intermediary between the Powers and Austria. M. Berthelot added that, as no private information had been given to any journalist, the information in the Echo de Paris involved this newspaper alone, and merely showed that the German démarche appeared to have been known elsewhere than at the Quai d'Orsay, and apart from any action on his part. The German Ambassador did not take up the allusion.

On the other hand, the Austrian Ambassador at London also came to reassure Sir Edward Grey, telling him that the Austrian note did not constitute an 'ultimatum" but "a demand for a reply with a time limit"; which meant that if the Austrian demands are not accepted by 6 o'clock this evening, the Austrian Minister will leave Belgrade and the Austro-Hungarian Government will begin military "preparations" but not military "operations."

The Cabinet of London, like those of Paris and St. Petersburgh, has advised Belgrade to express regret for any complicity which might be established in the crime of Serajevo, and to promise the most complete satisfaction in this respect. The Cabinet added that in any case it was Servia's business to reply in terms which the interests of the country appeared to call for. The English Minister at Belgrade is to consult his French and Russian colleagues, and, if these have had corresponding instructions in the matter, advise the Servian Government to give satisfaction on all the points on which they shall decide that they are able to do so.

Sir Edward Grey told Prince Lichnowsky (who, up to the present, has made no communication to him similar to that of Herr von Schoen at Paris) that if the Austrian note caused no difficulty between Austria and Russia, the English Government would not have to concern themselves with it, but that it was to be feared that the stiffness of the note and the shortness of the time limit would bring about a state of tension. Under these conditions the only chance that could be seen of avoiding a conflict would consist in the mediation of France, Germany, Italy and England, Germany alone being able to influence the Government at Vienna in this direction.

The German Ambassador replied that he would transmit this suggestion to Berlin, but he gave the Russian Ambassador, who is a relative of his, to understand that Germany would not lend herself to any démarche at Vienna.

THE German Ambassador came to the Foreign Office to state that his Government would refuse to interfere in the dispute between Austria and Servia.

Sir Edward Grey replied that without the co-operation of Germany at Vienna, England would not be able to take action at St. Petersburgh. If, however, both Austria and Russia mobilised, that would certainly be the occasion for the four other Powers to intervene. Would the German Government then maintain its passive attitude, and would it refuse to join with England, France and Italy ?

Prince Lichnowsky does not think so, since the question would no longer be one of difficulties between Vienna and Belgrade, but of a conflict between Vienna and St. Petersburgh.

Sir Edward Grey added this observation, that if war eventually broke out, no Power in Europe would be able to take up a detached attitude (pourrait s'en désintéresser).

THE Russian Government is about to endeavour to obtain from the Austro-Hungarian Government an extension of the time limit fixed by the ultimatum, in order that the Powers may be able to form an opinion on the judicial dossier, the communication of which is offered to them.

M. Sazonof has asked the German Ambassador to point out to his Government the danger of the situation, but he refrained from making any allusion to the measures which Russia would no doubt be led to take, if either the national independence or the territorial integrity of Servia were threatened. The evasive replies and the recriminations of Count de Pourtalès left an unfavourable impression on M. Sazonof.

The Ministers will hold a Council to-morrow with the Emperor presiding. M. Sazonof preserves complete moderation. "We must avoid", he said to me, "everything which might precipitate the crisis. I am of opinion that, even if the Austro-Hungarian Government come to blows with Servia, we ought not to break off negotiations."

THE Russian Government has instructed its representative at Vienna to ask the Austrian Government for an extension of the time limit fixed for Servia, so as to enable the Powers to form an opinion on the dossier which Austria has offered to communicate to them, and with a view to avoiding regrettable consequences for everyone.

A refusal of this demand by Austria-Hungary would deprive of all meaning the démarche which she made to the Powers by communicating her note to them, and would place her in a position of conflict with international ethics.

The Russian Government has asked that you should make a corresponding and urgent démarche to Count Berchtold. I beg you to support the request of your colleague. The Russian Government have sent the same request to London, Rome, Berlin and Bucharest.

SIR Edward Grey has had communicated to him this morning the instructions which require the Russian Ambassador at Vienna to ask for an extension of the time limit given to Servia by Austria's note of the day before yesterday. M. Sazonof asked that the Russian démarche should be supported by the English Embassy.

Sir Edward Grey telegraphed to Sir M. de Bunsen to take the same action as his Russian colleague, and to refer to Austria's communication which was made to him late last night by Count Mensdorff, according to the terms of which the failure of Servia to comply with the conditions of the ultimatum would only result, as from to-day, in a diplomatic rupture and not in immediate military operations.

Sir Edward Grey inferred from this action that time would be left for the Powers to intervene and find means for averting the crisis.

THIS morning the English Chargé d'Affaires, acting under instructions from his Government, asked Herr von Jagow if Germany were willing to join with England, France and Italy with the object of intervening between Austria and Russia, to prevent a conflict and, in the first instance, to ask Vienna to grant an extension of the time limit imposed on Servia by the ultimatum.

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs replied that directly after the receipt of Prince Lichnowsky's despatch informing him of the intentions of Sir Edward Grey, he had already telegraphed this very morning to the German* Ambassador at Vienna to the effect that he should ask Count Berchtold for this extension. Unfortunately Count Berchtold is at Ischl. In any case, Herr von Jagow does not think that this request would be granted.

The English Chargé d'Affaires also enquired of Herr von Jagow, as I had done yesterday, if Germany had had no knowledge of the Austrian note before it was despatched, and he received so clear a reply in the negative that he was not able to carry the matter further; but he could not refrain from expressing his surprise at the blank cheque given by Germany to Austria.

Herr von Jagow having replied to him that the matter was a domestic one for Austria, he remarked that it had become essentially an international one.

points out that the lateness of Austria's communication to the Powers makes the effect of this communication illusory, inasmuch as it does not give the Powers time to consider the facts brought to their notice before the expiration of the time limit. THE Russian Chargé d'Affaires has, in accordance with his instructions, approached the Secretary of State with a view to securing an extension of the time limit of the ultimatum. Herr von Jagow replied that he had already transmitted to Vienna a suggestion of this nature, but that in his opinion all these démarches were too late.

M. Broniewski insisted that if the time limit could not be extended, action at least might be delayed so as to allow the Powers to exert themselves to avoid a conflict. He added that the Austrian note was couched in terms calculated to wound Servia and to force her into war.

Herr von Jagow replied that there was no question of a war, but of an "exécution" in a local matter.

The Charge d'Affaires in reply expressed regret that the German Government did not weigh their responsibilities in the event of hostilities breaking out, which might extend to the rest of Europe; to this Herr von Jagow replied that he refused to believe in such consequences.

The Russain Charge d'Affaires, like myself, has heard the rumour that Austria, while declaring that she did not desire an annexation of territory, would occupy parts of Servia until she had received complete satisfaction. "One knows," he said to me, "what this word 'satisfaction' means." M. Broniewski's impressions of Germany's ultimate intentions are very possimistic.

In the absence of the Marquis di San Giuliano, M. Salandra and M. di Martino replied that they would put themselves into communication with the Minister for Foreign Affairs, but that his reply could not reach them until towards 6 o'clock, that is to say, too late to take any step at Vienna.

Prince Koudacheff informed him nevertheless of the démarche which he had to carry out, by means of two telegrams en clair, one addressed to him on his journey and the other at his destination. He does not expect any result.

Baron Macchio, General Secretary to the Ministry for Foreign Affairs to whom the Prince communicated the tenour of his instructions and of his telegrams, behaved with icy coldness when it was represented to him that to submit for consideration grievances with documentary proofs, without leaving time for the dossier to be studied, was not consonant with international courtesy. Baron Macchio replied that one's interests sometimes exempted one from being courteous.

The Austrian Government is determined to inflict humiliation on Servia; it will accept no intervention from any Power until the blow has been delivered and received full in the face by Servia.

The Servian Government agrees to publish to-morrow in the Journal Officiel the declaration which has been required of them; they will communicate it also to the army by means of an Order of the Day; they will dissolve the societies of national defence and all other associations which might agitate against Austria-Hungary; they undertake to modify the press law, to dismiss from service in the army, in the ministry of public instruction and in the other Government offices, all officials who shall be proved to have taken part in the propaganda; they only request that the names of these officials may be communicated to them.

As to the participation of Austrian officials in the enquiry, the Government ask that an explanation of the manner in which this will be exercised may be given to them. They could accept no participation which conflicted with international law or with good and neighbourly relations.

They accept all the other demands of the ultimatum and declare that if the Austro-Hungarian Government is not content with this, they are ready to refer the matter to the Hague Tribunal or to the decision of the Great Powers who took part in the preparation of the declaration of March 31, 1909.

THROUGHOUT the afternoon there has been a persistent rumour that Servia had submitted to the Austrian demands. This evening the newspapers published extra editions which announce a rupture at Belgrade and the departure of the Austro-Hungarian Minister.

The correspondent of the Agence Havas at the Wilhelmstrasse has just received confirmation of this rumour. Large crowds consisting of several hundred persons are collecting here before the newspaper offices and a demonstration of numbers of young people has just passed through the Pariser platz shouting cries of "Hurrah" for Germany, and singing patriotic songs. The demonstrators are visiting the Siegessaül, the Austrian, and then the Italian Embassy. It is a significant outburst of chauvinism.

A German whom I saw this evening confessed to me that it had been feared here that Servia would accept the whole Austrian note, reserving to herself the right to discuss the manner in which effect should be given to it, in order to gain time and to allow the efforts of the Powers to develop effectively before the rupture.

In financial circles measures are already being taken to meet every eventuality for no means of averting the crisis is seen, in view of the determined support which Germany is giving to Austria.

I, for my part, see in England the only Power which might be listened to at Berlin.

Whatever happens, Paris, St. Petersburgh and London will not succeed in maintaining peace with dignity unless they show a firm and absolutely united front.

Reply of Servian Government to Austro-Hungarian Note.

(Communicated by M. Vesnitch, Servian Minister, July 27.)

Belgrade, July 25, 1914.

THE Royal Servian Government have received the communication of the Imperial and Royal Government of the 10th instant, and are convinced that their reply will remove any misunderstanding which may threaten to impair the good neighbourly relations between the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy and the Kingdom of Servia.

Conscious of the fact that the protests which were made both from the tribune of the national Skuptchina and in the declarations and actions of the responsible representatives of the State—protests which were cut short by the declarations made by the Servian Government on the 18-31 March 1909—have not been renewed on any occasion as regards the great neighbouring Monarchy, and that no attempt has been made since that time, either by the successive Royal Governments or by their organs, to change the political and legal state of affairs created in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Royal Government draw attention to the fact that in this connection the Imperial and Royal Government have made no representation except one concerning a school-book, and that on that occasion the Imperial and Royal Government received an entirely satsifactory explanation. Servia has several times given proofs of her pacific and moderate policy during the Balkan crisis, and it is, thanks to Servia and to the sacrifice that she has made in the exclusive interest of European peace, that that peace has been preserved. The Royal Government cannot be held responsible for manifestations of a private character, such as articles in the press and the peaceable work of societies—manifestations which take place in nearly all countries in the ordinary course of events, and which, as a general rule, escape official control. The Royal Government are all the less responsible, in view of the fact that at the time of the solution of a series of questions which arose between Servia and Austria-Hungary, they gave proof of a great readiness to oblige, and thus succeeded in settling the majority of these questions to the advantage of the two neighbouring countries.

For these reasons the Royal Government have been pained and surprised at the statements, according to which members of the Kingdom of Servia are supposed to have participated in the preparations for the crime committed at Serajevo; the Royal Government expected to be invited to collaborate in an investigation of all that concerns this crime, and they were ready, in order to prove the entire correctness of their attitude, to take measures against any persons concerning whom representations were made to them. Falling in, therefore, with the desire of the Imperial and Royal Government, they are prepared to hand over for trial any Servian subject, without regard to his situation or rank, of whose complicity in the crime of Serajevo proofs are forthcoming, and more specially they undertake to cause to be published on the first page of the "Journal officiel," on the date of the 13-26 July, the following declaration :—

"The Royal Government of Servia condemn all propaganda which may be directed against Austria-Hungary, that is to say, all such tendencies as aim at ultimately detaching from the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy territories which form part thereof, and they sincerely deplore the baneful consequences of these criminal movements. The Royal Government regret that, according to the communication from the Imperial and Royal Government, certain Servian officers and officials should have taken part in the above-mentioned propaganda, and thus compromised the good neighbourly relations to which the Royal Servian Government was solemnly engaged by the declaration of the 18-31 March 1909, which declaration disapproves and repudiates all idea or attempt at interference with the destiny of the inhabitants of any part whatsoever of Austria-Hungary, and they consider it their duty formally to warn the officers, officials and entire population of the Kingdom that henceforth they will take the most rigorous steps against all such persons as are guilty of such acts, to prevent and to repress which they will use their utmost endeavour."

This declaration will be brought to the knowledge of the Royal Army in an order of the day in the name of His Majesty the King, by His Royal Highness the Crown Prince Alexander, and will be published in the next official army bulletin.

The Royal Government further undertake :—

1. To introduce at the first regular convocation of the Skuptchina a provision into the press law providing for the most severe punishment of incitement to hatred or contempt of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, and for taking action against any publication the general tendency of which is directed against the territorial integrity of Austria-Hungary.

The Government engaged at the approaching revision of the Constitution to cause an amendment to be introduced into article 22 of the Constitution of such a nature that such publication may be confiscated, a proceeding at present impossible under the categorical terms of article 22 of the Constitution.

2. The Government possess no proof, nor does the note of the Imperial and Royal Government furnish them with any, that the "Narodna Odbrana" and other similar societies have committed up to the present any criminal act of this nature through the proceedings of any of their members. Nevertheless, the Royal Government will accept the demand of the Imperial and Royal Government and will dissolve the "Narodna Odbrana" Society and every other society which may be directing its efforts against Austria-Hungary.

3. The Royal Servian Government undertake to remove without delay from their public educational establishments in Servia all that serves or could serve to foment propaganda against Austria-Hungary, whenever the Imperial and Royal Government furnish them with facts and proofs of this propaganda.

4. The Royal Government also agree to remove from military service all such persons as the Judicial enquiry may have proved to be guilty of acts directed against the integrity of the territory of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy and they expect the Imperial and Royal Government to communicate to them at a later date the names and the acts of these officers and officials for the purposes of the proceedings which are to be taken against them.

5. The Royal Government must confess that they do not clearly grasp the meaning or the scope of the demand made by the Imperial and Royal Government that Servia shall undertake to accept the collaboration of the organs of the Imperial and Royal Government upon their territory, but they declare that they will admit such collaboration as agrees with the principle of international law, with criminal procedure, and with good neighbourly relations.

6. It goes without saying that the Royal Government consider it their duty to open an enquiry against all such persons as are, or eventually may be, implicated in the plot of the 15-28 June, and who happen to be within the territory of the Kingdom. As regards the participation in this enquiry of Austro-Hungrian agents or authorities appointed for this purpose by the Imperial and Royal Government, the Royal Government cannot accept such an arrangement, as it would be a violation of the Constitution and of the law of criminal procedure; nevertheless, in concrete cases communications as to the results of the investigation in question might be given the Austro-Hungarian agents.

7. The Royal Government proceeded, on the very evening of the delivery of the note, to arrest Commandant Voislav Tankossitch. As regards Milan Ziganovitch, who is a subject of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy and who up to the 15-28 June was employed (on probation) by the directorate of railways, it has not yet been possible to arrest him.

The Austro-Hungrian Government are requested to be so good as to supply as soon as possible, in the customary form, the presumptive evidence of guilt, as well as the eventual proofs of guilt which have been collected up to the present, at the enquiry at Serajevo for the purposes of the later enquiry.

8 The Servian Government will reinforce and extend the measures which have been taken for preventing the illicit traffic of arms and explosives across the frontier. It goes without saying that they will immediately order an enquiry and will severely punish the frontier officials on the Schabatz-Loznitza line who have failed in their duty and allowed the authors of the crime of Serajevo to pass.

9. The Royal Government will gladly give explanations of the remarks made by their officials whether in Servia or abroad, in interviews after the crime which, according to the statement of the Imperial and Royal Government, were hostile towards the Monarchy, as soon as the Imperial and Royal Government have communicated to them the passages in question in these remarks, and as soon as they have shown that the remarks were actually made by the said officials, although the Royal Government will itself take steps to collect evidence and proofs.

10. The Royal Government will inform the Imperial and Royal Government of the execution of the measures comprised under the above heads, in so far as this has not already been done by the present note, as soon as each measure has been ordered and carried out.

If the Imperial and Royal Government are not satisfied with this reply, the Servian Government, considering that it is not to the common interest to precipitate the solution of this question, are ready, as always, to accept a pacific understanding either by referring this question to the decision at the International Tribune of the Hague, or to the great Powers which took part in the drawing up of the declaration made by the Servian Government on the 18-31st March 1909.

CHAPTER IV.

FROM THE RUPTURE OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS, (JULY 25, 1914), TO THE DECLARATION OF WAR BY AUSTRIA ON SERVIA, (JULY 28, 1914).

No. 50.

M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, to the President of the Council (on board the "La France"), and to the French Ambassadors at London, St. Petersburgh, Berlin, Vienna, Rome.

Paris, July 26, 1914.

THE events of Saturday can be summed up as follows :—refusal of Austria to grant the extension of the time limit asked for by Russia,—departure of the Austrian Minister from Belgrade after receiving a reply from Servia which was considered insufficient although it reached the limit of any possible concession,—order for mobilisation given in Servia whose Government retired to Kragoujewatz, where it was followed by the French and Russian Ministers.

The Italian Government, to whom the Austrian note had been communicated on Friday, without any request for support or even advice, could not, in the absence of the Marquis di San Giuliano, who does not return till Tuesday, make any reply to the suggestion of the Russian Government proposing to press at Vienna for an extension of time. It appears from a confidential communication by the Italian Ambassador to M. Paléologue that at Vienna people still soothe themselves with the illusion that Russia "will not hold firm." It must not be forgotten that Italy is only bound by the engagements of the Triple Alliance if she has been consulted beforehand.

From St. Petersburgh we learn that M, Sazonof has advised Servia to ask for English mediation. At the Council of Ministers on the 25th, which was held in presence of the Emperor, the mobilisation of thirteen army crops intended eventually to operate against Austria was considered; this mobilisation, however, would only be made effective if Austria were to bring armed pressure to bear upon Servia, and not till after notice had been given by the Minister for Foreign Affairs upon whom falls the duty of fixing the day, liberty being left to him to go on with negotiations even if Belgrade should be occupied. Russian opinion makes clear that it is both politically and morally impossible for Russia to allow Servia to be crushed.

In London the German démarche was made on the 25th in the same terms as those used by Baron von Schoen at Paris. Sir Edward Grey has replied to Prince Lichnowsky that if the war were to break out, no Power in Europe could take up a detached attitude. He did not express himself more definitely and used very reserved language to the Servian Minister. The communication made on the evening of the 25th by the Austrian Ambassador makes Sir Edward Grey more optimistic; since the diplomatic rupture does not necessarily involve immediate military operations, the Secretary of State is still willing to hope that the Powers will have time to intervene.

At Berlin the language used by the Secretary of State to the Russian Chargé d'Affaires is unsatisfactory and dilatory; when the latter asked him to associate himself with a démarche at Vienna for an extension of the time limit, he replied that he had already taken action in this sense but that it was too late: to the request for an extension of the time limit before active measures were taken. he replied that this had to do with a domestic matter, and not with a war but with local operations. Herr von Jagow pretends not to believe that the Austrian action could lead to general consequences.

A real explosion of chauvinism has taken place at Berlin. The German Emperor returns direct to Kiel. M. Jules Cambon thinks that, at the first military steps taken by Russia, Germany would immediately reply, and probably would not wait for a pretext before attacking us.

At Vienna, the French Ambassador has not had time to join in the démarche of his Russian colleague for obtaining an extension of the time limit fixed for Servia; he does not regret it, this démarche having been categorically rejected, and England not having had time to give instructions to her representative about it.

A note from the English Embassy has been delivered to me: it gives an account of the conversation between the British Ambassador at St. Petersburgh and M. Sazonof and M. Paléologue. Sir Edward Grey thinks that the four Powers who are not directly interested ought to press both on Russia and Austria that their armies should not cross the frontier, and that they should give time to England, France, Germany and Italy to bring their mediation into play. If Germany accepts, the English Government has reason to think that Italy also would be glad to be associated in the joint action of England and France; the adherence of Germany is essential, for neither Austria nor Russia would tolerate any intervention except that of impartial friends or allies.

A TELEGRAM from Vienna which has just been received at the Consulta informs them that the diplomatic rupture between Austria and Servia has taken place and that Austria is proceeding to military measures.

The Marquis di San Giuliano, who is at Fiuggi, will not return to Rome, till the day after to-morrow.

To-day I had an interesting conversation with the President of the Council on the situation, the full gravity of which he recognises. From the general drift of his remarks, I have carried away the impression that the Italian Government would be willing, in case of war, to keep out of it and to maintain an attitude of observation.

M. Salandra said to me on this subject: "We shall make the greatest efforts to prevent peace being broken; our situation is somewhat analogous to that of England. Perhaps we could do something in a pacific sense together with the English." M. Salandra stated definitely to me that the Austrian note had been communicated to Rome at the last moment.

Rome, July 26, 1914.

M. SAZONOF yesterday told the Italian Ambassador at St. Petersburgh that Russia would employ all diplomatic means to avoid a conflict, and that she did not give up hope that mediation might lead Austria to a less uncompromising attitude; but that Russia could not be asked to allow Servia to be crushed.

I observe that the greater part of Italian public opinion is hostile to Austria in this serious business.

M. Paléologue, French Ambassador at St. Peiersburgh, to M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs.

St. Petersburgh, July 26, 1914.

THE Minister for Foreign Affairs continues with praiseworthy perseverance to seek means to bring about a peaceful solution. "Up to the last moment," he declared to me, "I shall show myself ready to negotiate."

It is in this spirit that he has just sent for Count Szápáry to come to a "frank and loyal explanation." M. Sazonof commented in his presence on the Austro-Hungarian ultimatum, article by article, making clear the insulting character of the principal clauses. "The intention which inspired this document," he said, "is legitimate if you pursued no aim other than the protection of your territory against the intrigues of Servian anarchists; but the procedure to which you have had recourse is not defensible." He concluded: "Take back your ultimatum, modify its form, and I will guarantee you the result."

The Austro-Hungarian Ambassador showed himself moved by this language; however, while awaiting instructions, he reserves the opinion of his Government. Without being discouraged M. Sazonof has decided to propose this evening to Count Berchtold the opening of direct conversations between Vienna and St. Petersburgh on the changes to be introduced into the ultimatum.

This friendly and semi-official interposition of Russia between Austria and Servia has the advantage of being expeditious. I therefore believe it to be preferable to any other procedure and likely to succeed.

M. Dumaine, French Ambassador at Vienna, to M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Vienna, July 26, 1914.

M. SCHEBEKO has returned hastily from a journey to Russia; he had only undertaken it after he had received an assurance from Count Berchtold that the demands on Servia would be thoroughly acceptable.

The Austro-Hungarian Ambassador at St. Petersburgh spoke in the same sense to M. Sazonof the evening before the delivery of the note. This procedure, which is quite usual in the diplomacy of the Monarchy, and which Baron Macchio has also employed towards me, seems to have greatly added to the irritation of the Russian Government.

M. Schebeko will make an effort, however, to profit by the delay which is indispensable for mobilisation, in order to make a proposal for an arrangement, which will at least have the advantage of allowing us to measure the value of the pacific declarations of Germany.

While we were talking over the situation this evening, in company with Sir M. de Bunsen, the latter received instructions from the Foreign Office with reference to the démarche to be attempted by the representatives of the four Powers less directly interested. I am expecting, therefore, that we may have to consult to-morrow with the Duke d'Avarna and with M. Tschirscky, who, in order to refuse his concurrence, will almost certainly entrench himself behind the principle of localising the conflict.

My impression is that the Austro-Hungarian Government, although surprised and perhaps regretting the vigour with which they have been inspired, will believe themselves obliged to commence military action.

No. 56.

M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, to the President of the Council (on board the "La France"), and to the French Ambassadors at London, St. Petersburgh, Berlin, Vienna, Rome.

Paris, July 26, 1914.

THE summary of the Servian reply to the Austrian note only reached us after twenty hours' delay. Although the Servian Government had given way on all points, with the exception of two small reservations, the Austro-Hungarian Minister has broken off relations, thus proving the determined wish of his Government to proceed to execution on Servia.

According to a telegram from M. Jules Cambon, the English Ambassador thinks that there is a slight yielding; when he observed to Herr von Jagow that Sir Edward Grey did not ask him to intervene between Austria and Servia, but as this question ceased to be localised, to intervene with England, France and Italy at Vienna and St. Petersburgh, the Secretary of State declared that he would do his best to maintain peace.

In the course of an interview between M. Barrère and the General Secretary of the Italian Ministry for Foreign Affairs, the latter indicated that probably the Italian Government would not have approved the Austrian note; but as it was not communicated to them beforehand, the Government consider themselves by this fact relieved of all responsibility in the grave step taken by Austria.

The German Ambassador came this afternoon to make a communication to me relating to an intervention by France with Russia in a pacific sense. "Austria," he said to me, "has declared to Russia, that she was not pursuing any territorial aggrandisement nor any attack on the integrity of the Kingdom of Servia; her only intention is to ensure her own tranquillity and to take police measures. The prevention of war depends on the decision of Russia; Germany feels herself identified with France in the ardent desire that peace may be maintained, and has the firm hope that France will use her influence in this sense at St. Petersburgh."

I replied to this suggestion that Russia was moderate, that she had not committed any act which allowed any doubt as to her moderation, and that we were in agreement with her in seeking a peaceful solution of the dispute. It, therefore, appeared to us that Germany on her side ought to act at Vienna, where her action would certainly be effective, with a view to avoiding military operations leading to the occupation of Servia.

The Ambassador having observed to me that this could not be reconciled with the position taken up by Germany "that the question concerned only Austria and Servia," I told him that the mediation at Vienna and St. Petersburgh could be the act of the four other Powers less interested in the question.

Herr von Schoen then entrenched himself behind his lack of instructions in this respect, and I told him that in these conditions I did not feel myself in a position to take any action at St. Petersburgh alone.

The conversation ended by the renewed assurances of the Ambassador of the peaceful intention of Germany, whom he declared to be on this point identified with France.

Note for the Minister.

Paris, Sunday evening, July 26, 1914.

AFTER the visit which he paid to the Minister at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, Baron von Schoen went this evening at 7 o'clock to the Direction Politique, to ask that in order to avoid the appearance in the newspapers of comments intended to influence public opinion, such as that in the Echo de Paris of the evening before, and in order to define exactly the sense of the démarches of the German Government, a brief statement should be communicated to the press on the interview between the German Ambassador and the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Herr von Schoen, in order to define what he had in his mind, suggested the following terms, which the Acting Political Director took down at his dictation: "During the afternoon the German Ambassador, and the Minister for Foreign Affairs had a fresh interview, in the course of which, in the most amicable spirit, and acting in an identical spirit of peaceful co-operation (sentiment de solidarité pacifique), they examined the means which might be employed to maintain general peace."

The Acting Political Director replied at once, "Then, in your opinion, every thing is settled, and you bring us the assurance that Austria accepts the Servian note or will enter into conversations with the Powers on this matter?" The Ambassador having appeared surprised and having vigorously denied the suggestion, it was explained to him that if there was no modification in Germany's negative attitude, the terms of the suggested "note to the press" were exaggerated, and of a nature to give a false security to French opinion by creating illusion on the real situation, the dangers of which were only too evident.

To the assurances lavished by the German Ambassador as to the optimistic impressions which he had formed, the Acting Political Director replied by asking if he might speak to him in a manner quite personal and private, as man to man, quite freely and without regard to their respective functions. Baron von Schoen asked him to do so.

M. Berthelot then said that to any simple mind Germany's attitude was inexplicable if it did not aim at war: a purely objective analysis of the facts and the psychology of the Austro-German relations led logically to this conclusion. In the face of the repeated statement that Germany was ignorant of the contents of the Austrian note, it was no longer permissible to raise any doubt on that point; but was it probable that Germany would have arrayed herself on the side of Austria in such an adventure with her eyes closed? Did the psychology of all the past relations of Vienna and Berlin allow one to admit that Austria could have taken up a position without any possible retreat, before having weighed with her ally all the consequences of her uncompromising attitude? How surprising appeared the refusal by Germany to exercise mediating influence at Vienna, now that she knew the extraordinary text of the Austrian note! What responsibility was the German Government assuming and what suspicions would rest upon them if they persisted in interposing between Austria and the Powers, after what might be called the absolute submission of Servia, and when the slightest advice given by them to Vienna would put an end to the nightmare which weighed on Europe!

The reaking off of diplomatic relations by Austria, her threats of war, and the mobilisation which she was undertaking make peculiarly urgent pacific action on the part of Germany, for from the day when Austrian troops crossed the Servian frontier, one would be faced by an act which without doubt would oblige the St. Petersburgh Cabinet to intervene, and would risk the unloosing of a war which Germany declares that she wishes to avoid.

Herr von Schoen, who listened smiling, once more affirmed that Germany had been ignorant of the text of the Austrian note,[1] and had only approved it after its delivery; she thought, however, that Servia had need of a lesson severe enough for her not to be able to forget it, and that Austria owed it to herself to put an end to a situation which was dangerous and intolerable for a great Power. He declared besides that he did not know the text of the Servian reply, and showed his personal surprise that it had not satisfied Austria, if indeed it was such as the papers, which are often ill-informed, represented it to be.

He insisted again on Germany's peaceful intentions and gave his impressions as to the effect that might arise from good advice given, for instance, at Vienna, by England in a friendly tone. According to him Austria was not uncompromising; what she rejects is the idea of a formal mediation, the "spectre" of a conference; a peaceful word coming from St. Petersburgh, good words said in a conciliatory tone by the Powers of the Triple Entente, would have a chance of being well received. He added, finally, that he did not say that Germany on her side would not give some advice at Vienna.

In these conditions the Political Director announced that he would ask the Minister if it appeared to him opportune to communicate to the press a short note in a moderate tone.

M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minisier for Foreign Affairs, to M. Jules Cambon, French Ambassador at Berlin, on board the "La France" (for the President of the Council) and to the French Ambassadors at London, St. Petersburgh, Vienna and Rome.

Paris, July 27, 1914.

THE three steps taken by the German Ambassador at Paris seem characteristic:—On Friday he reads a note in which the German Government categorically place themselves between Austria, and the Powers, approving the Austrian ultimatum to Servia, and adding that "Germany warmly desires that the dispute should remain localised, since any intervention of another party must through the play of its alliances provoke incalculable consequences;"—the second day, Saturday, the effect having been produced and the Powers having on account of the surprise, the shortness of the time-limit, and the risks of general war, advised Servia to yield, Herr von Schoen returns to minimise this step, pretending to be astonished at the impression produced, and protests that intentions are attributed to Germany which she does not harbour, "since," he says, "there was neither concert before nor threat afterwards;—the third day, Sunday, the result having been obtained, since Servia has yielded, as one might almost say, to all the Austrian demands, the German Ambassador appears on two occasions to insist on Germany's peaceful intentions, and on her warm desire to co-operate in the maintenance of peace, after having registered the Austrian success which closes the first phase of the crisis.

The situation at the moment of writing remans disturbing, on account of the incomprehensible refusal of Austria to accept Servaia's submission, of her operations of mobilisation, and of her threats to invade Servia. The attitude taken up from the beginning by the Austrain Government, with German support, her refusal to accept any conversation with the Powers, practically do not allow the latter to intervene effectively with Austria without the mediation of Germany. However time presses, for if the Austrian army crosses the frontier it will be very difficult to circumscribe the crisis, Russia not appearing to be able to tolerate the occupation of Serv a after the latter has in reality submitted to the Austrian note, giving every satisfaction and guarantee. Germany, from the very fact of the position taken up by her, is qualified to intervene effectively and be listened to at Vienna; if she does not do this she justifies all suspicions and assumes the responsibility for the war.

The Powers, particularly Russia, France and England, have by their urgent advice induced Belgrade to yield; they have thus fulfilled their part; now it is for Germany, who is alone able to gain a rapid hearing at Vienna, to give advice to Austria, who has obtained satisfaction and cannot, for a detail easy to adjust, bring about a general war.

It is in these circumstances that the proposal made by the Cabinet of London is put forward M. Sazonof having said to the British Ambassador that as a consequence of the appeal of Servia to the Powers, Russia would agree to stand aside, Sir Edward Grey has formulated the following suggestion to the Cabinets of Paris Berlin, and Rome: the French, German and Italian Ambassadors at London would be instructed to seek with Sir Edward Grey a means of resolving the present difficulties, it being understood that during this conversation Russia, Austria, and Servia would abstain from all active military operations. Sir A. Nicolson has spoken of this suggestion to the German Ambassador, who showed himself favourable to it; it will be equally well received in Paris, and also at Rome, according to all probability. Here again it is Germany's turn to speak, and she has an opportunity to show her good will by other means than words.

I would ask you to come to an understanding with your English colleague, and to support his proposal with the German Government in whatever form appears to you opportune.

BIENVENU-MARTIN.

No. 62.

M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, to the President of the Council (on board the "La France") and to the French Ambassadors at London, St. Petersburgh, Berlin and Vienna.

Paris, July 27, 1914.

AFTER his demarché of yesterday tending to an intervention by France at St. Petersburgh in favour of peace, the German Ambassador returned, as I have informed you, to the Direction Politique on the pretext that it might be desirable to communicate to the press a short note indicating the peaceful and friendly sense of the conversation; he even suggested the following terms:—"During the afternoon the German Ambassador and the Minister for Foreign Affairs had a fresh interview, in the course of which, in the most amicable spirit and acting in an identical spirit of peaceful co-operation, they examined the means which might be employed to maintain general peace." He was told in answer, that the terms appeared exaggerated and of a nature to create in public opinion illusions on the real situation; that, however, a brief note in the sense indicated, that is to say, giving an account of a conversation at which the means employed to safeguard peace, had been examined, might be issued if I approved it.

The note communicated was as follows:—"The German Ambassador and the Minister for Foreign Affairs have had a fresh interview, in the course of which they sought means of action by the Powers for the maintenance of peace." This phrasing deliberately terse, avoided an appearance of solidarity with Germany which might have been misinterpreted.

This morning Herr von Schoen addressed a private letter to the Political Director under pretext of resuming his interview with the Minister, and has added "Note well the phrase in an identical spirit of peaceful co-operation. This is not an idle phrase, but the sincere expression of the truth." The summary annexed to the letter was drawn up as follows:—"The Cabinet of Vienna has, formally and officially, caused it to be declared to that of St. Petersburgh, that it does not seek any territorial acquisition in Servia, and that it has no intention of making any attempt against the integrity of the kingdom; its sole intention is that of assuring its own tranquillity. At this moment the decision whether a European war must break out depends solely on Russia. The German Government have firm confidence that the French Government, with which they know that they are at one in the warm desire that European peace should be able to be maintained, will use their whole influence with the Cabinet of St. Petersburgh in a pacific spirit."

I have let you know the reply which has been given (a French demarché at St. Petersburgh would be misunderstood, and must have as corollary a German demarché at Vienna, or, failing that, mediation by the four less interested Powers in both capitals).

Herr von Schoen's letter is capable of different interpretations; the most probable is that it has for its object, like his demarché itself, an attempt to compromise France with Russia and, in case of failure, to throw the responsibility for an eventual war on Russia and on France; finally by pacific assurances which have not been listened to, to mask military action by Austria in Servia intended to complete the success of Austria.

I communicate this news to you by way of information and for any useful purpose you can put it to.

The German Ambassador will not have failed to be struck with this declaration, but to make its weight felt in Germany and to avoid a conflict, it seems indispensable that the latter should be brought to know for certain that they will find England and Russia by the side of France.

"Then," he added, "a European question would arise, and war would follow in which other Powers would be led to take a part."

The attitude of Great Britain is confirmed by the postponement of the demobilisation of the fleet. I remarked to him that Sir Edward Grey's proposal opened the way to a peaceful issue. Herr von Jagow replied that he was disposed to join in, but he remarked to me that, if Russia mobilised, Germany would be obliged to mobilise at once, that we should be forced to the same course also, and that then a conflict would be almost inevitable. I asked him if Germany would regard herself as bound to mobilise in the event of Russia mobilising only on the Austrian frontier; he told me "No," and authorised me formally to communicate this limitation to you. He also attached the greatest importance to an intervention with Russia by the Powers which were friendly with and allied to her.

Finally, he remarked that if Russia attacked Austria, Germany would be obliged to attack at once on her side. The intervention proposed by England at St. Petersburgh and Vienna could, in his opinion, only come into operation if events were not precipitated. In that case, he does not despair that it might succeed. I expressed my regret that Austria, by her uncompromising attitude, had led Europe to the difficult pass through which we were going, but I expressed the hope that intervention would have its effect.

At the same time I think that the chances of success of Sir E. He knew, indeed, that this note was to have a rigorous and forcible character; but he had not suspected that it could take such a form. I asked him if it was true that he had given at Vienna, as certain papers allege, an approval of the Austrian action and an assurance that Italy would fulfil her duties as an ally towards Austria. "In no way:" the Minister replied: "we were not consulted; we were told nothing; it was not for us then to make any such communication to Vienna."

The Marquis di San Guiliano thinks that Servia would have acted more wisely if she had accepted the note in its entirety; to-day he still thinks that this would be the only thing to do, being convinced that Austria will not withdraw any of her claims, and will maintain them, even at the risk of bringing about a general conflagration; he doubts whether Germany is disposed to lend herself to any pressure on her ally. He asserts, however, that Germany at this moment attached great importance to her relations with London, and he believes that if any Power can determine Berlin in favour of peaceful action, it is England.

As for Italy she will continue to make every effort in favour of peace. It is with this end in view, that he has adhered without hesitation to Sir Edward Grey's proposal for a meeting in London of the Ambassadors of those Powers which are not directly interested in the Austro-Servian dispute.

THE English Ambassador, who returned to-day, saw the Secretary of State and discussed with him Sir Edward Grey's proposal. In his reply Herr von Jagow continued to manifest his desire for peace, but added that he could not consent to anything which would resemble a conference of the Powers; that would be to set up a kind of court of arbitration, the idea of which would only be acceptable if it were asked for by Vienna and St. Petersburgh. Herr von Jagow's language confirms that used by Baron von Schoen to your Excellency.

In fact, a démarche by the four Powers at Vienna and St. Petersburgh could be brought about by diplomatic means without assuming the form of a conference and it is susceptible of many modifications; the important thing is to make clear at Vienna and at St. Petersburgh the common desire of the four Powers that a conflict should be avoided. A peaceful issue from the present difficulties can only be found by gaining time.

JULES CAMBON.

No. 74.

M. Jules Cambon, French Ambassador at Berlin, to M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Berlin, July 27, 1914.

I HAD a conversation yesterday with the Secretary of State and gave support to the démarche which Sir E. Goschen had just made.

Herr von Jagow replied to me, as he had to the English Ambassador, that he could not accept the proposal that the Italian, French and German Ambassadors should be instructed to endeavour to find with Sir Edward Grey a method of resolving the present difficulties, because that would be to set up a real conference to deal with the affairs of Austria and Russia.

I replied to Herr von Jagow that I regretted his answer, but that the great object which Sir Edward Grey had in view went beyond any question of form; that what was important was the co-operation of England and France with Germany and Italy in a work of Peace; that this co-operation could take effect through common démarches at St. Petersburgh and at Vienna; that he had often expressed to me his regret at seeing the two allied groups always opposed to one another in Europe; that there was here an opportunity of proving that there was a European spirit, by showing four Powers belonging to the two groups acting in common agreement to prevent a conflict.

Herr von Jagow evaded the point by saying that Germany had engagements with Austria. I observed to him that the relations of Germany with Vienna were no closer than those of France with Russia, and that it was he himself who actually was putting the two groups of allies in opposition.

The Secretary of State then said to me that he was not refusing to act so as to keep off an Austro-Russian dispute, but that he could not intervene in the Austro-Servian dispute. "The one is the consequence of the other," I said, "and it is a question of preventing the appearance of a new factor of such a nature as to lead to intervention by Russia."

As the Secretary of State persisted in saying that he was obliged to keep his engagements towards Austria, I asked him if he was bound to follow her everywhere with his eyes blind-folded, and if he had taken note of the reply of Servia to Austria which the Servian Chargé d'Affaires had delivered to him this morning. "I have not yet had time," he said, "I regret it. You would see that except on some points of detail Servia has yielded entirely. It appears then that, since Austria has obtained the satisfaction which your support has procured for her, you might to-day advice her to be content or to examine with Servia the terms of her reply."

As Herr von Jagow gave me no clear reply, I asked him whether Germany wished for war. He protested energetically, saying that he knew what was in my mind, but that it was wholly incorrect. "You must then," I replied, "act consistently. When you read the Servian reply, I entreat you in the name of humanity to weigh the terms in your conscience, and do not personally assume a part of the responsibility for the catastrophe which you are allowing to be prepared." Herr von Jagow protested anew, adding that he was ready to join England and France in a common effort, but that it was necessary to find a form for this intervention which he could accept, and that the Cabinets must come to an understanding on this point.

"For the rest," he added, "direct conversations between Vienna and St. Petersburgh have been entered upon and are in progress. I expect very good results from them and I am hopeful."

As I was leaving I told him that this morning I had had the impression that the hour of détente had struck, but I now saw clearly that there was nothing in it. He replied that I was mistaken; that he hoped that matters were on the right road and would perhaps rapidly reach a favourable conclusion. I asked him to take such action in Vienna as would hasten the progress of events, because it was a matter of importance not to allow time for the development in Russia of one of those currents of opinion which carry all before them.

In my opinion it would be well to ask Sir Edward Grey, who must have been warned by Sir Edward Goschen of the refusal to his proposal in the form in which it was made, to renew it under another form, so that Germany would have no pretext for refusing to associate herself with it, and would have to assume the responsibilities that belong to her in the eyes of England.

JULES CAMBON.

No. 75.

M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, to the French Ambassadors at London, St. Petersburgh, Berlin, Vienna and Rome.

Paris, July 27, 1914.

THE Austro-Hungarian Ambassador came to see me to hand me a memorandum which amounted to an indictment of Servia; he was instructed by his Government to state that since Servia had not given a satisfactory reply to the requirements of the Imperial Government, the latter found themselves obliged to take strong measures to induce Servia to give the satisfaction and guarantees that are required of her. To-morrow the Austrian Government will take steps to that effect.

I asked the Ambassador to acquaint me with the measures contemplated by Austria, and Count Scézsen replied that they might be either an ultimatum, or a declaration of war, or the crossing of the frontier, but he had no precise information on this point.

I then called the Ambassador's attention to the fact that Servia had accepted Austria's requirements on practically every point, and that the differences that remained on certain points might vanish with a little mutual good will, and with the help of the Powers who wished for peace; by fixing to-morrow as the date for putting her resolution into effect, Austria for the second time was making their co-operation practically impossible, and was assuming a grave responsibility in running the risk of precipitating a war, the limits of which it was impossible to foresee.

I enclose for your information the memorandum that Count Scézsen handed to me.

BIENVENU-MARTIN.

ENCLOSURE.

Memorandum of the Austro-Hungarian Government handed by Count Szécsen to M. Bienvenu-Martin on July 27, 1914.

THE Servian agitation, which has as its object the separation from the Austrian Monarchy of the South Slav districts, in order to attach them to a great Servain State, dates from far back. This propaganda on Servian soil always the same in its ultimate object, although varying in its means and intensity, reached its culminating point at the time of the annexation crisis. Throwing off the protecting cloak of secrecy, it then revealed its purposes openly and undisguisedly, and showed, under the patronage of the Servian Government, its intention of achieving its aims by every means in its power.

While the whole of the Servian press was calling for war against the Monarchy with shouts of rancour and by the perversion of facts, associations were being formed to foment this strife—irrespective of other means of propaganda.

The association which had become the most important was the Narodna Obrana. Having its origin in a revolutionary committee which already existed, it was constituted as a private society, although in fact it took the form of an organisation dependent upon the Foreign Office at Belgrade through military and civil officials. Amongst its founders should be specially mentioned General Bozo Jankvic, ex-Ministers Ljuba Jovanovic, Ljuba Davidovic, and Valislav Valovic, Zivojin Dacic (Director of the Government Printing Establishment) and Majors (then Captains) Voja Tanovic, and Milan Pribicevic. This association adopted as its aim the creation and organisation of armed bands, with a view to the war that they hoped for against the Monarchy. A convincing description of the activity of the Narodna Obrana at this time will be found, in particular, in the statements of Trifko Krstanovic, a Bosnia-Herzegovinian subject, in the course of his evidence before the Council of War at Serajevo, he was then at Belgrade, and had been accepted by the Narodna, Odbrana, with other subjects of the Monarchy, as comitadji. Krstanovic had been brought, with about one hundred and forty others, to a school established for the formation of new bands at Cuprija, in the district of Jagodina, managed by Captains Voja Tankosic and Dusan Putnick. The only masters in this school were Servian officers: General Bozo Jankovic and Captain Milan Pribicevic introduced great regularity into the courses of organisation of these bands, which lasted three months.

The comitadji received there complete instruction in musketry, bomb throwing, mines and the destruction of railways, tunnels, bridges and telegraphs; their duty was according to their leaders, to put into practice in Bosnia-Herzegovina the knowledge they had recently acquired.

By this action on the part of the Narodna Odbrana, carried on in the most open manner and encouraged by the Servian Government, guerilla warfare was carried on against the Monarchy. In this way the subjects of the Monarchy were led into treason against their country, and induced as Servian emissaries systematically to practise secret attacks against the means of defence of their country.

This period of aggressive aspirations ended with the announcement of the Servian Government on the 31st March 1909, in which that Government announced that they were prepared to accept the new situation created in public law by the annexation of Bosnia-Herzegovina, and solemnly promised that they would do their best to maintain in future friendly and neighbourly relations with the Monarchy.

With this declaration it might have been expected that the agitation, which constituted a source of constant trouble to Austria-Hungary, would be brought to an end, and that means might have been found for an amicable rapprochement between Servia and the Monarchy. Deprived of the support of the Servian Government, and combated by that Government in accordance with its engagements, the hostile propaganda could only have continued secretly, and would have been condemned to prompt destruction. On the other hand, the ties of language, race and culture existing between the Servian districts in the south of the Monarchy and Servia ought to have resulted in the realisation of a task of common development inspired by mutual friendship and parallel interest.

However, these hopes have not been realised. Aspirations hostile to the Monarchy have continued; and, under the eyes of the Servian Government, who have done nothing to suppress this agitation, the propaganda instituted against Austria has only increased in extent and volume. Hatred against the Monarchy has been fanned and has developed into an irreconcilable feeling. The Servian people alike by the old methods, which have been adapted to the situation, and by more thorough methods, have been called "to an inevitable struggle of annihilation" against Austria. Their secret ramifications have been systematically spread towards the Slav domains in the south of the Monarchy, whose subjects have been incited to treason.

Above all, this spirit has found constant expression in the Servian press.

Up to the present time, no fewer than 81 newspapers appearing in Servia have had to be withdrawn from postal circulation on account of their contents falling within the scope of the penal law. There is hardly a clause protecting the sacred person of the Monarch and of the members of the Imperial Family or the integrity of the State that has not been violated by Servian papers. In Appendix I, will be found a few of the numerous instances occurring in the press, of ideas of the nature indicated above.

Without entering into a detailed examination of the points of view of Servian public opinion, it is necessary to note that the press has, in spite of the formal recognition accorded by Servia, never ceased to consider the annexation of Bosnia-Herzegovina, both before and after the event, as a robbery committed against Servia for which reparation is due. This idea recurs not only in the papers of advanced views, but also in the Samuprava, which is in such close touch with Foreign Office at Belgrade, where this idea finds expression in hardly veiled terms. [See Appendix II (b).]

Nor can one omit to consider how the attempt made on 15th June 1910, at Serajevo by Bogdan Zerajic against Commandant von Varesanin, Governor of Bosnia-Herzegovina, was applauded by the press.

It will be remembered that Zerajic killed himself immediately after his deed, and before committing it had burned all his papers. For these reasons it is impossible to throw full light upon the motive of this outrage; it has, however, been possible from a document found on his person to form the conclusion that he was a follower of the views of Kropotkin. Circumstantial evidence likewise leads to the conclusion that the attempt was of an anarchist type.

This, however, did not prevent the Servian press from proclaming the criminal as a national Servian hero, or from praising his deed. The Politika even combated the idea that Zerajic was an anarchist, and declared him to be a "Servian hero whose name all Servians will repeat with respect and grief."

The Politika considers the 18th August of the same year, "the birthday of His Imperial and Royal Majesty," as a favourable opportunity on which to return to the subject of Zerajic, "whose name will be to the people something like that of a saint," and solemnly to praise the outrage in a poem. (Appendix No. I.)

This is the way in which this crime, which was quite foreign to territorial aspirations against the Monarchy, has been exploited for the furtherance of this idea, and in which the murder was hailed in the most explicit way as a glorious means towards the realisation of this aim, and one worthy to be imitated in the struggle. This sanctification of murder as a weapon fully admissible in the struggle against the Monarchy, reappears later in papers speaking of the attempt made by Jukic against the Royal Commissioner of Cujav. [Appendix I(e).]

These newspapers, which are circulated not only in Servia, but also, as was ascertained later, illicitly in the Monarchy, by well-organised secret methods, have awakened and kept alive this mood in the masses, a mood which has provided a fruitful field for the misdeeds of the associations hostile to the Monarchy.

The Narodna Odbrana has become the centre of the agitation carried on by the associations. The same persons who were at its head at the time of the annexation still control it. They still include the very violent opponents of the Monarchy mentioned above in the capacity of active and energetic organisers. Organised on a broad and far-reaching scale and governed by a hierarchy of officials (see Appendix II, "Organisation"), the Narodna Odbrana had soon acquired about 400 members who carried on a very active agitation.

Moreover, the Narodna became closely allied with the "Shooting Federation" (762 societies), the Association of the Sokol Dusan Silni (2,500 members), the Olympian Club, the Association of Horsemen, Knez Mihajlo, the Society of Sportsmen and the League of Development, as well as numerous other associations, all of which, under the guidance and protection of the Narodna, work on the same lines. Becoming more and more closely intermingled, these associations arrived at a complete amalgamation in such a way that to-day they are only members of the single body of the Narodna. Thus the latter has set up all over Servia a very close network of agitation and has attracted to its principles all those who are respective of its ideas.

The official publications of this society demonstrate sufficiently clearly the policy of the Narodna.

In its statutes, ostensibly those of a "Development Society," concerning itself only with the spiritual and corporal improvement of the Servian population and its material progress, the Narodna discloses in its deed of amalgamation (see Appendix II) the true and single motive of its existence in that which it calls its "reorganised programme."

To preach to the Servian people especially "the sacred truth by fanatical and indefatigable work" under the pretence that the Monarchy wishes "to take away Servia's liberty, her language, and even to destroy her"; that it is an unavoidable necessity to wage against Austria-Hungary, her first and greatest enemy, "a war of destruction with rifle and cannon" and "by every means" to prepare the people for this war for the liberation of the conquered territories in which seven millions of their brothers are subject to contumely and oppression. All the efforts for progress of the Narodna are exclusively concerned with this idea simply as a means for the organisation and education of the people, with a view to the struggle of annihilation that they foresee.

All the associations affiliated to the Narodna work in the same spirit. The association of the Sokol of Kragujuvac will serve as an example. (See Appendix III.)

As in the case of the Narodna, officers, professors and civil servants are at its head.

The speech in which its President, Major Kovacevic, opened the annual meeting of 1914 made absolutely no mention of physical training which is the real object of the Sokol, and only spoke of "preparation for War" against a "dangerous, heartless, and odious enemy invading us from the north," who robs millions of Servian brothers of their liberties and rights, and keeps them in bondage and irons.

In the administrative reports of the association the technical work is placed entirely in the background, and only serves as headlines for the records of the real "objects of the activities of the Administration", especially "the preparation of national development and the necessity of strengthening the oppressed nation," with the object of enabling it to carry out its "incomplete programme, its unfinished task" and accomplishing "that great action which is to be carried out in the near future: the liberation of brothers who are living beyond the Drina and who are suffering the martyrdom of the crucified."

Even the treasurer makes use of his financial reports to send forth the appeal that "hawks must be reared" capable "of bringing freedom to the brothers not yet freed."

As in the case of the aspirations of progress in the Narodna, the gymnastic activity of the Sokol is not the real object but simply a means at the service of the same propaganda carried on with the same intentions, not to say with the very same words.

When the Narodna makes its appeal for the struggle of annihilation against the Monarchy, it does not address itself only to the peopole of the Monarchy but to all the southern Slavs. In the eyes of the Narodna the Slav regions in the south of the Monarchy belong to "our subjected Servian territories." (See also Appendix IV.) So also the Slav subjects of the south of the Monarchy must take part in this "national work," so also this "healthy and necessary" activity must make itself felt on the other side of the southern frontier, and even on the soil of the Monarchy the Narodna seeks its "heroes for the holy war," among whom Obilic, the murderer of Mourad, is cited as an example worthy of imitation, of sacrifice for one's country.

But in order to induce the brothers "outside Servia" to share in "the work of private effort," the Narodna is intimately associated with the "brothers on this side of the frontier." It is not said in what way this intimate association is effected, no doubt because it appertains to that part of the "common work" which "for many reasons cannot and ought not to be explained."

How far this branch of its activity extends is shown by the fact that not only the central committee of the Narodna, but also certain of its local committees contain special sections for "foreign affairs."

The foreign activity of the Narodna and its affiliated branches is particularly varied.

What is relatively the less dangerous, because it can be officially controlled, consists of lecture tours undertaken by the influential members of the Narodna in the south-western parts of the Monarchy, where they speak before various societies on national or educational subjects. These occasions give the speakers the opportunity of explaining the true aims of the association in the most receptive circles of their adherents, in language more or less veiled, which is intelligible to those who are already au courant.

Amongst these emissaries one of the best known is Zivojin Dacic, Director of Government Printing Establishment, already alluded to; it was he who on the 8th of August 1909 issued an appeal to the Servian people in which he called Austria "the enemy of Servia" and invited Servia to prepare herself for a war against the Monarchy. On numerous occasions he has undertaken tours of this nature. At Karlova, in 1912, he flung prudence to the winds and spoke of "the union of all the Serbs against the common enemy."

More dangerous are the relations formed by associations imbued with the spirit of the Narodna under the cloak of common interests and of culture, with associations in the Monarchy; for the respective envoys and corporate visits of these associations, which escape all control, are utilised by the Servian for all sorts of plots against the Monarchy.

Thus, for instance, an envoy of the Narodna at the fête of Serajevo in September 1912 (see Appendix VI) had the effrontery secretly to recruit Bosnian adherents to his society. The sending of a representative of the Sokol of Kragujevac to this fête must have meant for the brothers of Bosnia: "We have not forgotten you, the wings of the falcon of Sumadija are still strong"—a thought which, to the initiated, will no doubt have found a quite different expression consonant with the aims of the Narodna explained above (Appendix III). As to the events that take place at the meetings of the same kind in Servia, it is clear that they escape all control of the Royal and Imperial authorities, who only possess on this matter confidential information which is difficult to check. In this connection doubts must be raised regarding the visit of Agram students to Servia (April 1912) who received from the Servians an official reception of an almost military character, accompanied even by a parade and by a review of troops in their honour, and that in a manner so suggestive that the association of the Sokol of Kragujevac could say, "This event marks the beginning and the key of a great deed which must find its accomplishment in the near future; it is a germ which will ripen when the soul of the people bursts its bounds until there is no barrier that has not been destroyed."

It is only recently that it has come to the knowledge of the Austro-Hungarian authorities that the associations of the Servian Sokols have succeeded in making arrangements with some similar societies of the Monarchy to establish a connection with them which is up to the present secret, and the character of which is not yet quite clear; for the information on this point is still being collected. Up to the present, however, the information obtained admits of the conclusion that traces have been discovered of one of the ways by which the subversive aims of the Servian Sokols have seduced and led astray certain groups of persons in the Monarchy.

This propaganda among circles so very different assumes minor importance if it is compared with that of the "foreign work" which is conducted by the Narodna and its friends in the form of a personal agitation among individuals. It is in this field that the most melancholy results are shown.

By means of confidential and secret emissaries, it carries the poison of mutiny to the circles of men of mature age as well as those of irresponsible youth.

It is thus, for example, that the late Officers of Honved V. B. D. K. V. N. and the Lieutenant of Gendarmerie of Slav Croatia, V. K., led astray by Milan Pribicevitch, left the service of the army of the Monarchy in the most suspicious circumstances and turned towards Servia; they have seen in the meanwhile most of their hopes falsified, or at any rate in part, and are thinking of returning to the country that they have betrayed. The agitation introduced from Servia into the middle schools of Croatia and Bosnia is unhappily so well known that it hardly needs illustration. What is less known is that people who have been expelled from the Croatian and Bosnian schools, owing to grave acts against discipline, are received in Servia with open arms and often even protected by the State and supported as enemies of the Monarchy. The Servian schools with their masters, who, inspired by hostility towards Austria, are to a great extent members of the Narodna, are clearly establishments thoroughly adapted for training experts of this kind. A very notable case may be quoted here. Last March several pupils of the Normal Training College of Pakrac (Croatia) were expelled on account of a strike. They returned to Servia, where they immediately obtained places as schoolmasters or were admitted to training colleges. One of those who had been so expelled, and who had relations with circles unfriendly to the Monarchy, declared publicly that he and his people would express the opinion and disseminate the view during the stay of the hereditary Archduke in Bosnia, that this province is Servian territory. It should be particularly noted that during the stay of the Archduke Franz Ferdinand in Bosnia, the Prefect of the Servian district of Krajna gave to three scholars, who were thus involved, Servian passports, in which he falsely described them as Servian subjects, although he must have known that they were Croats. With these passports the three agitators were able to enter the Monarchy without being noticed, where, however, they were eventually recognised and arrested.

But all this is not enough to give a complete representation of the "foreign" activity of the Narodna.

The Imperial and Royal Government has been informed, for a long time past, confidentially, that the Narodna has made military preparations for the war which it desires to make against the Monarchy in the following way: it has been sending emissaries in order, as soon as hostilities broke out to attempt in bands the destruction of the transport and to stir up revolt or panic (see Appendix VII).

The criminal proceedings taken in 1913 by the Council of War at Serajevo against Jovo Jajlicic and his associates for espionage confirm this confidential information. As at the time of its foundation, the preparation for war by armed bands still figures in the programme of the Narodna, to which must now further be added a complete service of espionage. It is for this reason that the programme of the Narodna, described as "reorganised" is in reality, an extended programme. Acts of terrorism must finally result from an atmosphere of hatred which is publicly and secretly provoked, and from an agitation which evades all responsibility, and in order to bring them about, all means are to be regarded as good in the struggle against Austria including even, without any sense of shame, common acts of murder.

On the 8th of June 1912, a man named Jukic shot at von Cuvaj, the Royal Commissioner at Agram, with the result that Councillor von Herwic, who was seated in the same carriage, was mortally wounded; in his flight he killed a policeman who followed him and he wounded two others.

From the subsequent investigation it appeared that Jukic was saturated with the ideas and plans of the Narodna, and that, although Jukic had for some time past been devoting himself to criminal schemes, these schemes were only matured after he had made an excursion to Belgrade, together with the Agram students, for the celebrations prepared in honour of these visitors on the 18th April 1912; that Jukic entered into relations with several people belonging to the Narodna with whom he had had political discussions. A few days afterwards he returned to Belgrade, and there he received from a Servian Major a bomb and from a friend a Browning pistol, with which he carried out his crime. The bomb found at Agram came, according to experts, from a military arsenal.

Jukic's attempt had not yet been forgotten, when on the 18th August 1913, Stephan Dojcic, who had returned from America to Agram, made an attempt on the life of the Royal Commissioner, Baron Skerlecz, an attempt which was the outcome of action organised by the Servians among the southern Slavs living in America, and which was the work of the foreign propaganda of the Narodna.

A pamphlet by the Servian, T. Dimitrijevitch, printed in Chicago, with its unbridled attacks against His Imperial and Royal Majesty, and its appeal to the Servians of the Monarchy with reference to their impending "deliverance," and urging them to enter Servia, demonstrates the correspondence between the propaganda carried out unchecked by the Servians in America and that carried on from Servia in the territory of the Monarchy.

And again, scarcely a year afterwards, Agram was the scene of a new outrage, this time unsuccessful.

On the 20th May 1913, Jacob Schaffer made an attempt at the Agram theatre on the life of the Ban, Freiherr von Skerlecz, an attempt which was frustrated at the last moment by a policeman. The subsequent investigation revealed the existence of a plot inspired by Rudolf Hercigonja. From the depositions of the latter and his five accomplices, it is manifest that this crime also originated in Servia.

Having taken part in an unsuccessful attempt to liberate Jukic, Hercigonja fled to Servia (October 1912), where together with his accomplice Marojan Jakcic he was seen in company with comitadjis and members of the Narodna. As frequently happens when immature minds concern themselves too early with political questions, these meetings had the worst possible result. Hercigonja returned home impressed by the dogma of Belgrade, that the Slav areas in the south of the Monarchy should be separated from it and re-united to the Servian Kingdom. He had further been persuaded by the teachings of his friends that this object should be pursued by means of attempts on the lives of persons holding high office in the Monarchy.

This is the spirit in which Hercigonja influenced his friends at Agram and converted them to his ideas. Foremost among his plans was the carrying out of an attempt on the life of the heir to the throne.

A few months before Suka Alginovic had been tried for high treason. In the course of his trial three witnesses declared that Alginovic had told them that he had received one hundred dina from the Narodna and a similar sum from a secret association of students to start propaganda, but especially to carry out an attempt on the life of the Archduke Franz Ferdinand.

It is clear how far the criminal agitation of the Narodna and of those who share in its views has of late been primarily directed against the person of the hereditary Archduke.

From these facts the conclusion may be drawn that the Narodna, as well as the associations hostile to the Monarchy which were grouped around it, recently decided that the hour had struck to translate theory into practice.

It is noteworthy that the Narodna limits itself in this way to inciting, and where the incitement had fallen on fertile soil, to providing means of material assistance, but that it has confided all the dangerous part in this active propaganda exclusively to the youth of the Monarchy, which has been excited and corrupted by this organisation, which alone ought to bear the burden of this pitiful "heroism."

All the characteristics of this procedure are found in the history and origin of the profoundly regrettable outrage of the 28th June.

Princip and Grabez are examples of these young men who have been poisoned from their school days by the doctrines of the Narodna. At Belgrade, where he consorted with students imbued with these ideas, Princip busied himself with criminal plans against the hereditary Archduke (against whom was directed the particularly rancorous hatred of the elements hostile to the Monarchy), when he made his tour in the annexed territories.

He became friendly with Kabrinovitch, who mingled with the same associates, and whose radically revolutionary opinions, as he himself admits, inspired him with the same sense of hostility to the Monarchy, and brought him into the active propaganda. But however carefully this plot might have been prepared, and however determined the conspirators may have been, the attempt would nevertheless not have been carried out if people had not been found, as in the case of Jukic, to provide for the conspirators means of committing their crime; for as Princip and Kabrinovitch have expressly admitted, they lack the necessary arms as well as money to purchase them. It is interesting to see where the conspirators procured their arms. Milan Pribicevic and Zivogin Dacic, the two principal men in the Narodna, were the first to whom the conspirators turned as to a sure source of help in their need, doubtless because it had already become a tradition among those ready to commit crimes that they could obtain from the members of the Narodna instruments for murder. The fortuitous circumstance that these two men were not at Belgrade at the critical moment doubtless frustrated this plan; however, Princip and Kabrinovitch had no difficulty in finding other help, that of Milan Ciganovic, an ex-comitadji, and now a railway official at Belgrade and member of the Narodna. The latter and his friend Major Voja Tankosic, who has already been mentioned, and was also one of the heads of the Narodna, and who in 1908 was the head of the school of armed bands of Kuprija (Appendix V), now appear as the moving spirits in the plot. They had only one doubt, and that but a fleeting one, namely, whether the three conspirators were really resolved to commit this act, but this doubt soon disappeared, thanks to their own suggestions. Thenceforward, they were ready to give every assistance. Tankosic procured four Browning pistols and ammunition, and money for the journey. Six hand grenades from the Servian Army completed the armament, a fact which recalls the case of Jukic. Anxious to be successful, Tankosic obtained shooting lessons for them, but Tankosic and Ciganovic were further anxious to insure secrecy for the plot by special means scarcely desired by the assassins. They, therefore, suborned Zian Kali, pointing out that the two culprits must commit suicide after the crime, a precaution which was to be specially advantageous to them because secrecy would relieve them of the slight danger which they themselves were incurring in this enterprise. Sure death for victims of their corruption, perfect security for themselves, such is the motto, as is now known, of the Narodna.

In order to render the execution of the crime possible, it was necessary that the arms and the bombs should arrive in Bosnia by underhand methods and without being perceived. There again Ciganovic gave all the assistance in his power; he explained to the conspirators the route which had been agreed upon, and assured them that the Servian customs authorities would help them. The way in which this journey, described by Princip as "mysterious" was organised and carried out can leave no doubt but that this route was a secret route prepared in advance and already often used for the secret designs of the Narodna. With a simplicity and assurance which could only result from long habit, the frontier guards at Sabak and Losnika lent their administrative organisation for the purpose; the secret transport with its complicated system of constantly changing guides, who could be summoned as if by magic, and were always to be found on the spot when there was need, was effected without any difficulty. Without investigating the object of this strange journey of a few very young students, the Servian authorities set this smooth machinery in motion at a word from the ex-comitadji and minor railway official Ciganovic. However, they had no need to make an inquiry, for, from the information before them, it was clear that a new mission of the Narodna was being carried out. When he saw the arsenal of bombs and revolvers, the guard, Crbic, smiled a benevolent smile of approval, showing conclusively how accustomed they were on this route to find contraband of this nature.

The Royal Servian Government have committed a serious default in allowing all this to take place.

Though bound to cultivate neighbourly relations with Austria-Hungary, they have allowed the press to excite hatred against the Monarchy; they have allowed associations established on their own territory under the leadership of high officers, of public officials, of masters and of judges, to busy themselves with a public campaign against the Monarchy, instilling revolutionary ideas into the minds of its citizens; they have not prevented men with a share in the direction of the military and civil administration from poisoning the public conscience contrary to all moral sentiment, to such an extent that in this conflict vulgar and treacherous assassination appears the most praiseworthy weapon,

Official Communiqué of the Press Bureau.

Vienna, July 28, 1914.

THE Austrian Minister at Belgrade has returned to Vienna and presented the text of the Servian reply.

A spirit of insincerity pervades the whole of this reply; it makes it clear that the Servian Government have no serious intention of putting an end to the culpable toleration which has given rise to the anti-Austrian intrigues. The Servian reply contains such restrictions and limitations not only with regard to the principle of the Austro-Hungarian démarche, but also with regard to the claims advanced by Austria, that the concessions which are made are without importance.

In particular, under an empty pretext, there is a refusal to accept the participation of the Austro-Hungarian officials in the prosecution of the authors of the crimes who are resident in Servian territory.

In the same way, the Servian reply to the Austrian demand that the hostile intrigues of the press should be suppressed, amounts to a refusal.

The demand with regard to the measures to be taken to prevent associations hostile to Austria-Hungary from continuing their activity under another name and form after their dissolution, has not even been considered.

Inasmuch as these claims constitute the minimum regarded as necessary for the re-establishment of a permanent peace in the south-east of the Monarchy, the Servian reply is considered to be insufficient.

That the Servian Government is aware of this appears from the fact that they contemplate the settlement of the dispute by arbitration, and also from the fact that on the day on which their reply was due and before it was in fact submitted, they gave orders for mobilisation.

No. 76.

M. René Viviani, President of the Council, to M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs.

On board the "La France," July 28, 1914.

I HAVE received from Copenhagen your telegram summarising the events of Saturday; the telegram describing the last visit of the German Ambassador; that relating to the mediation which Russia advises Servia to ask for and to the English démarches at Berlin, as well as your telegram received this morning directly through the Eiffel Tower.

I fully approve the reply which you made to Baron von Schoen; the proposition which you maintained is self-evident; in the search for a peaceful solution of the dispute, we are fully in agreement with Russia, who is not responsible for the present situation, and has not taken any measure whatever which could arouse the least suspicion; but it is plain that Germany on her side would find it difficult to refuse to give advice to the Austro-Hungarian Government, whose action has provoked the crisis.

We must now continue to use the same language to the German Ambassador. Besides, this advice is in harmony with the two English proposals mentioned in your telegram. I entirely approve the combination suggested by Sir E. Grey, and I am myself requesting M. Paul Cambon to inform him of this. It is essential that it should be known at Berlin and at Vienna that our full concurrence is given to the efforts which the British Government is making with a view to seeking a solution of the Austro-Servian dispute. The action of the four less interested Powers cannot, for the reasons given above, be exerted only at Vienna and St. Petersburg. In proposing to exert it also at Belgrade, which means, in fact, between Vienna and Belgrade, Sir E. Grey grasps the logic of the situation; and, in not excluding St. Petersburg, the offers on the other hand to Germany, a method of withdrawing with perfect dignity from the démarche by which the German Government have caused it to be known at Paris and at London that the affair was looked upon by them as purely Austro-Servian and without any general character.

Please communicate the present telegram to our representatives with the great Powers and to our Minister at Belgrade.

IN spite of the assurances given, both in Berlin and Paris by the German representatives, of the desire of their Government to assist in efforts for the maintenance of peace, no sincere action has been taken by them to hold back Austria, the English próposal, which consists in action by the four less interested Powers to obtain a cessation of military operations at Vienna, Belgrade, and St. Petersburgh, and in a meeting at London of the German, French, and Italian Ambassadors under the Chairmanship of Sir E. Grey, with a view of seeking a solution of the Austro-Servian difficulty, meets with objections at Berlin of such a nature as must lead to failure.

The Austrian Ambassador has proceeded to announce that his Government will to-morrow take energetic measures to compel Servia to give to them the satisfaction and guarantees which they demand from that power; Count Scezsen has given no explanation as to those measures; according to our Military Attaché at Vienna, mobilisation dating from July 28 appears to be certain.

I HAVE had another visit from the German Ambassador this morning; he told me that he had no communications or official proposal to make to me, but that he came, as on the evening before, to talk over the situation and the methods to be employed to avoid action which would be irreparable. When I asked him about Austria's intentions, he declared that he did not know them, and was ignorant of the nature of the means of coercion which she was preparing.

Germany, according to Baron von Schoen, only asks that she may act with France for the maintenance of peace. Upon my observing to him that a proposal for mediation by the four Powers to which we had adhered, and which had obtained assent in principle from Italy and Germany, had been put forward by England, the Ambassador said that the German Government really only asked to associate themselves with the action of the Powers, provided that that action did not take the form of arbitration or a conference, which had been rejected by Austria.

I replied that, if it was the expression only which was an obstacle to the Austrian Government, the object might be attained by other means; the German Government are in a good position to ask Austria to allow the Powers time to intervene and find a means of conciliation.

Baron von Schoen then observed to me that he had no instructions, and only knew that Germany refused to exercise any pressure on Austria, who does not wish for a conference. He accuses the French papers of attributing to Germany an attitude which she has not taken up, alleging that she is urging Austria on; doubtless she approves Austria's attitude, but she had no knowledge of the Austrian note; she did not see her way to check her too abruptly, for Austria must have guarantees against the proceedings of the Serbs.

SIR EDWARD GREY yesterday received my Austro-Hungarian and German colleagues. The first continued to maintain that the Servian reply was unacceptable. The second used language similar to that of Baron von Schoen at Paris. He emphasised the value of moderating action by Great Britain at St. Petersburg. Sir Edward Grey replied that Russia had shown herself very moderate from the beginning of the crisis, especially in her advice to the Servian Government, and that he would find it very embarrassing to give her pacific advice. He added that it was at Vienna that it was necessary to act and that Germany's help was indispensable.

On the other hand, the British Ambassador at St. Petersburgh has telegraphed that M. Sazonof had made a proposal to the Austrain Ambassador for a conversation on the Servian business. This information has been confirmed by the British Ambassador at Vienna, who has sent the information that the first interview between the Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs and Count Szápáry had produced a good effet at the Ballplatz.

Sir Edward Grey and Sir Arthur Nicolson told me that, if an agreement could be brought about by direct discussion between St. Petersburg and Vienna, it would be a matter for congratulation, but they raised some doubts as to the success of M. Sazonof's attempt.

When Sir George Buchanan asked M. Sazonof about the eventual meeting at London of a conference of representatives of Great Britain, France, Germany and Italy, to seek a solution for the present situation, the latter replied "that he had begun pourparlers with the Austrian Ambassador under conditions which he hoped were favourable; that, however, he had not yet received any reply to his proposal for the revision of the Servian note by the two Cabinets." If direct explanations with the Cabinet of Vienna are impracticable, M. Sazonof declares himself ready to accept the English proposals or any other of such a nature as to bring about a favourable issue of the dispute.

In any case, at a moment when the least delay might have serious consequences, it would be very desirable that these direct negotiations should be carried on in such a way as not to hamper Sir E. Grey's action, and not to furnish Austria with a pretext for slipping out of the friendly intervention of the four Powers.

The British Ambassador at Berlin having made a determined effort to obtain Herr von Jagow's adherence to Sir E. Grey's suggestion, the German Minister for Foreign Affairs replied that it was best to await the result of the conversation which had been begun between St. Petersburgh and Vienna. Sir E. Grey has, in consequence, directed Sir E. Goschen to suspend his démarche for the moment. In addition, the news that Austria has just officially declared war against Servia, opens new phase of the question.

M. SAZONOF'S conversation with Count Szápáry was brought to the knowledge of Herr von Jagow by the Russian Chargé d'Affaires. The Secretary of State told him that in agreement with the remarks of the German Ambassador in Russia, since the Austrian Government did not refuse to continue their conversations with the Russian Government after the expiry of the ultimatum, there was ground for hope that Count Berchtold on his side might be able to converse with M. Schebeko, and that it might be possible to find an issue from the present difficulties. The Russian Chargé d'Affaires takes a favourable view of this state of mind, which corresponds to Herr von Jagow's desire to see Vienna and St. Petersburgh enter into direct relations and to release Germany. There is ground, however, for asking whether Austria is not seeking to gain time to make her preparations.

To-day I gave my support to the démarche made by my British colleague with the Secretary of State. The latter replied to me, as he did to Sir Edward Goschen, that it was impossible for him to accept the idea of a kind of conference at London between the Ambassadors of the four Powers, and that it would be necessary to give another form to the English suggestion to procure its realisation. I laid stress upon the danger of delay, which might bring on war, and asked him if he wished for war. He protested, and added that direct conversations between Vienna and St. Petersburgh were in progress, and that from now on he expected a favourable result.

The British and Italian Ambassadors came to see me this morning together, to talk over with me the conversation which they had had with Herr von Jagow yesterday on the subject of Sir Edward Grey's proposal. To sum up, the Secretary of State used the same language to them as to me; accepting in principle the idea of joining in a démarche with England, Italy, and ourselves, but rejecting any idea of a conference.

My colleagues and I thought that this was only a question of form, and the British Ambassador is going to suggest to his Government that they should change the wording of their poposal, which might take the character of a diplomatic démarche at Vienna and St. Petersburgh.

In consequence of the repugnance shown by Herr von Jagow to any démarche at Vienna, Sir Edward Grey could put him in a dilemma, by asking him to state himself precisely how diplomatic action by the Powers to avoid war could be brought about.

We ought to associate ourselves with every effort in favour of peace compatible with our engagements towards our ally; but to place the responsibility in the proper quarter, we must take care to ask Germany to state precisely what she wishes.

COUNT BERCHTOLD has just declared to Sir M. de Bunsen that any intervention, aiming at the resumption of the discussion between Austria and Servia on the basis of the Servian reply, would be useless, and besides that it would be too late, as war had been officially declared at mid-day.

The attitude of my Russian colleague has never varied up to the present; in his opinion it is not a question of localising the conflict, but rather of preventing it. The declaration of war will make very difficult the initiation of pourparlers by the four Powers, as well as the continuation of the direct discussions between M Sazonof and Count Szápáry.

It is held here that the formula which seemed as if it might obtain the adherence of Germany—"Mediation between Austria and Russia"—is unsuitable, inasmuch as it alleges a dispute between those two Empires which does not exist up to the present.

Among the suspicions aroused by the sudden and violent resolution of Austria, the most disquieting is that Germany should have pushed her on to aggressive action against Servia in order to be able herself to enter into war with Russia and France, in circumstances which she supposes ought to be most favourable to herself and under conditions which have been thoroughly considered.

No. 85.

M. Bienvenu-Martin, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, to St. Petersburgh, London, Berlin, Rome, Vienna, Constantinople, Belgrade.

THE Austro-German attitude is becoming clearer. Austria uneasy concerning the slav propaganda, has seized the opportunity of the crime of Serajevo in order to punish the Servian intrigues, and to obtain in this quarter guarantees which, according as events are allowed to develop or not, will either affect only the Servian Government and army, or become territorial questions. Germany intervenes between her ally and the other Powers and declares that the question is a local one, namely, the punishment of a political crime committed in the past, and for the future sure guarantees that the anti-Austrian intrigues will be put an end to. The German Government thinks that Russia should be content with the official and formal assurance given by Austria, to the effect that she does not seek territorial aggrandisement and that she will respect the integrity of Servia; in these circumstances the danger of war can only come from Russia, if she seeks to intervene in a question which is well defined. In these circumstances any action for the maintenance of peace must therefore take place at St. Perersburgh alone.

This sophism, which would relieve Germany from intervening at Vienna, has been maintained unsuccessfully at Paris by Herr von Schoen, who has vainly endeavoured to draw us into identical Franco-German action at St. Petersburgh; it has been also expounded in London to Sir E. Grey. In France as in England a reply was given that the St. Petersburgh Cabinet have, from the beginning, given the greatest proofs of their moderation, especially by associating themselves with the Powers in advising Servia to yield to the requirements of the Austrian note. Russia does not therefore in any way threaten peace; it is at Vienna that action must be taken; it is from there that the danger will come, from the moment that they refuse to be content with the almost complete submission of Servia to exorbitant demands; that they refuse to accept the co-operations of the Powers in the discussion of the points which remain to be arranged between Austria and Servia; and, finally, that they do not hesitate to make a declaration of war as precipitate as the original Austro-Hungarian note.

The attitude at Berlin, as at Vienna, is still dilatory. In the former capital, while protesting that the Germans desire to safeguard general peace by common action between the four Powers, the idea of a conference is rejected without any other expedient being suggested, and while they refuse to take any positive action at Vienna. In the Austrian capital they would like to keep St. Petersburgh in play with the illusion of an entente which might result from direct conversations, while they are taking action against Servia.

In these circumstances it seems essential that the St. Petersburgh Cabinet, whose desire to unravel this crisis peacefully is manifest, should immediately give their adherence to the English proposal. This proposal must be strongly supported at Berlin in order to decide Herr von Jagow to take real action at Vienna capable of stopping Austria and preventing her from supplementing her diplomatic advantage by military successes. The Austro-Hungarian Government would, indeed, not be slow to take advantage of it in order to impose on Servia, under the elastic expression of "guarantees," conditions which, in spite of all assurances that no territorial aggrandisement was being sought, would in effect modify the status of Eastern Europe, and would run the risk of gravely compromsing the general peace either at once or in the near future.

The attitude of Germany is enigmatical and justifies every apprehension; it seems improbable that the Austro-Hungarian Government would have taken an initiative which would lead, according to a pre-conceived plan, to a declaration of war, without previous arrangement with the Emperor William.

The German Government stand with grounded arms ready to take peaceful or warlike action as circumstances may require, but there is so much anxiety everywhere that a sudden intervention against us would not surprise anybody here. My Russian and English colleagues share this feeling.

Berlin, July 29, 1914.

I ASKED the Secretary of State to-day how the question of direct conversations between Vienna and St. Petersburgh which seemed to him yesterday the best means of arriving at a détente, stood. He answered that at St. Petersburgh they seemed well disposed towards them and that he had asked Vienna to take this course. He was awaiting the reply. The British Government, after seeing the suggestion of a conference rejected, and let it be known that they would view with favour the inception of such conversations between Austria and Russia, and had asked Germany to urge Austria, which the Imperial Government are not failing to do.

I asked Herr von Jagow if he had at last received the Servian reply to Austria and what he thought of it. He replied that he saw in it a basis for possible negotiation. I added that it was just on that account that I considered the rupture by Austria, after she had received such a document, inexplicable.

The Secretary of State then remarked that with Eastern nations one could never obtain sufficient guarantees, and that Austria wished to be able to supervise the carrying out of promises made to her, a supervision which Servia refused. This, in the eyes of the Secretary of State, is the cardinal point. I answered Herr von Jagow that Servia, as she wished to remain independent, was bound to reject the control of a single Power, but that an International Commission would not have the same character. The Balkan States have more than one, for instance the Financial Commission at Athens. One could imagine, I said, for instance, among other combinations, a Provisional International Commission, charged with the duty of controlling the police inquiry demanded by Austria; it was clear, by this instance, that the reply of Servia opened the door to conversations and did not justify a rupture.

I then asked the Secretary of State if, leaving aside direct conversations between Vienna and St. Petersburgh to which Sir E. Grey had given his adherence, he did not think that common action could be exercised by the four Powers by means of their Ambassadors. He answered in the affirmative, adding that at this moment the London Cabinet were confining themselves to exercising their influence in support of direct conversations.

At the end of the afternoon the Imperial Chancellor asked the British Ambassador to come and see him. He spoke to him of the proposal of Sir E. Grey for the meeting of a conference; he told him that he had not been able to accept a proposal which seemed to impose the authority of the Powers on Austria; he assured my colleague of his sincere desire for peace and of the efforts he was making to that effect at Vienna, but he added that Russia was alone able to maintain peace or let loose war.

Sir E. Goschen answered that he did not agree, and that if war broke out Austria would be chiefly responsible, for it was inadmissible for her to have broken with Servia after the reply of the latter.

Without dicussing this point, the Chancellor said that he was trying his utmost to obtain direct conversations between Austria and Russia; he knew that England looked on such conversations with a favourable eye. He added that his own action would be rendered very difficult at Vienna, if it were true that Russia had mobilised fourteen army corps on the Austrian frontier. He asked my colleague to call Sir E. Grey's attention to what he had said.

Sir E. Goschen has telegraphed to London to this effect.

The attitude of the Chancellor is very probably the result of the last interview of Sir E. Grey with Prince Lichnowsky. Up to quite the last days they flattered themselves here that England would remain out of the question, and the impression produced on the German Government and on the financiers and business men by her attitude is profound.

THE opinion of my British, Russian and Italian colleagues agrees with mine concerning the impossibility of preventing the outbreak of hostilities between Austria and Servia, since all attemps to avoid the collision have failed.

M. Schebeko had asked that the negotiations begun at St. Petersburgh by MM. Sazonof and Szápáry should be continued and made more effective by special powers being conferred on the latter, but Count Berchtold has flatly refused. He showed in this way that Austria-Hungary does not tolerate any intervention which would prevent her from inflicting punishment and humiliation on Servia.

The Duke of Avarna admits that it is very probable that the imminence of a general insurrection among the Southern Slav inhabitants precipitated the resolutions of the Monarchy. He still clings to the hope that, after a first success of the Austro-Hungarian arms, but not before this, mediation might be able to limit the conflict.

The German efforts are in no way impeded by the declaration of war which occurred." A similar communication will be made at St. Petersburgh.

During the course of a conversation which I had this morning with Baron Von Schoen, the latter stated to me that the German Government did not know what the intentions of Vienna were. When Berlin knows how far Austria wishes to go, there will be a basis of discussion which will make conversations with a view to intervention easier.

When I observed that the military operations which had been begun would not perhaps allow any time for conversation, and that the German Government ought to use their influence at Vienna to delay them, the Ambassador answered that Berlin could not exercise any pressure, but that he hoped that the operations would not be pushed forward very actively.

M. ISVOLSKY came to me by order of his Government to communicate a telegram addressed by M. Sazonof to Berlin. It appears from this information that, in consequence of the declaration of war by Austria-Hungary on Servia, the measures of mobilisation already taken with regard to the largest part of the Austro-Hungarian army, and finally the refusal of Count Berchtold to continue negotiations between Vienna and St. Petersburgh, Russia had decided to mobilise in the provinces of Odessa, Kieff, Moscow and Kazan. While informing the German Government to this effect, the Russian Ambassador at Berlin was instructed to add that these military precautions were not in any way directed against Germany, and also did not imply aggressive measures against Austria-Hungary; furthermore the Russian Ambassador at Vienna had not been recalled.

The Russian Ambassador also gave me the substance of two telegrams addressed to London by M. Sazonof; the first, after pointing out that the declaration of war on Servia put an end to the conversations of the Russian Minister with the Austrian Ambassador, asked England to exercise her influence, as quickly as possible, with a view to mediation and to the immediate cessation of Austrian military operations (the continuation of which gave Austria time to crush Servia while mediation was dragging on); the second communicated the impression received by M. Sazonof from his conversations with the German Ambassador that Germany favours Austria's uncompromising attitude and is not exercising any influence on her. The Russian Minister thinks that the attitude of Germany is very disquieting, and considers that England is in a better position than the other Powers to take steps at Berlin with a view to exercising pressure on Vienna.

THE Minister for Foreign Affairs has been officially informed by the Russian Ambassador that his Government, in consequeuce of the declaration of war by Austria on Servia and of the measures of mobilisation which were from this moment being taken by Austria, had given the order to mobilise in the districts of Kieff, Odessa, Moscow and Kazan. He added that this step had no aggressive character against Germany, and that the Russian Ambassador at Vienna had not been recalled.

In speaking of this communication the Marquis di San Giuliano told me that unfortunately throughout this affair Austria and Germany had been, and were still, convinced that Russia would not move. In this connection he read to me a despatch from M. Bollati reporting an interview which he had had yesterday with Herr von Jagow, in which the latter had again repeated to him that he did not think that Russia would move. He based this belief on the fact that the Russian Government had just sent an agent to Berlin to treat about some financial questions. The Austrian Ambassador at Berlin also told his English colleague that he did not believe in a general war, since Russia was not in the mood or in the condition to make war.

The Marquis di San Giuliano does not share this opinion. He thinks that if Austria contents herself with humiliating Servia and with exacting, besides the acceptance of the note, some material advantages which do not involve her territory, Russia can still find some means of coming to an agreement with her. But if Austria wishes to dismember Servia or to destory her as an independent State, he thinks that it would be impossible for Russia not to intervene by military measures.

In spite of the extreme gravity of the situation, the Minister for Foreign Affairs does not seem to me to despair of the possibility of an agreement. He thinks that England can still exercise a great deal of influence in Berlin in the direction of peace. He had yesterday, he told me, a long conversation with the British Ambassador, Sir R. Rodd, in order to show him to what extent English intervention might be effective. He said to me in conclusion, "If your Government are of the same opinion, they could on their side make representations to this effect in London."

The Russian Government on their side will have expressed the same desire directly to the British Government; the declaration of war by Austria on Servia, her sending of troops to the Austro-Russian frontier, the consequent Russian mobilisation on the Galician frontier have in fact put an end to the direct Austro-Russian conversations.

The explanations which the German Government are going to ask for at Vienna, in accordance with the statement of Baron von Schoen which I have reported to you, in order to learn the intention of the Austrian Government, will allow the four Powers to exercise effective action between Vienna and St. Petersburgh for the maintenance of peace.

M. René Viviani, President of the Council, Minister for Foreign Affairs, to the French Ambassadors at St. Petersburgh and London.

Paris, July 30, 1914.

M. ISVOLSKY came to-night to tell me that the German Ambassador has notified M. Sazonof of the decision of his Government to mobilise the army if Russia does not cease her military preparations.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Tsar points out that these preparations were only commenced after Austria had mobilised eight army corps and had refused to arrange peacefully her differences with Servia. M. Sazonof declares that in these circumstances Russia can only expedite her arming and consider war as imminent, that she counts on the help of France as an ally, and that she considers it desirable that England should join Russia and France without loss of time.

France is resolved to fulfil all the obligations of her alliance.

She will not neglect, however, any efforts towards a solution of the conflict in the interests of universal peace. The conversation entered into between the powers which are less directly interested still allows of the hope that peace may be preserved; I therefore think it would be well that, in taking any precautionary measures of defence which Russia thinks must go on, she should not immediately take any step which may offer to Germany a pretext for a total or partial mobilisation of her forces.

Yesterday in the late afternoon the German Ambassador came and spoke to me of the military measures which the Government of the Republic were taking, adding that France was able to act in this way, but that in Germany preparations could not be secret and that French opinion should not be alarmed if Germany decided on them.

I answered that the French Government had not taken any step which could give their neighbours any cause for disquietude, and that their wish to lend themselves to any negotiations for the purpose of maintaining peace could not be doubted.

M. SAZONOF, to whom I communicated your desire that every military measure that could offer Germany the pretext for general mobilisation should be avoided, answered that in the course of last night the General Staff had suspended all measures of military precaution so that there should be no misunderstanding. Yesterday the Chief of the Russian General Staff sent for the Military Attaché of the German Embassy and gave him his word of honour that the mobilisation ordered this morning was exclusively directed against Austria.

Nevertheless, in an interview which he had this afternoon with Count Pourtalès M. Sazonof was forced to the conclusion that Germany does not wish to pronounce at Vienna the dicisive word which would safeguard peace. The Emperor Nicholas has received the same impression from an exchange of telegrams which he has just had personally with the Emperor William.

Moreover, the Russian General Staff and Admiralty have received disquiting information concerning the perparations of the German army and navy.

In giving me this information M. Sazonof added that the Russian Government are continuing none the less their efforts towards conciliation. He repeated to me : "I shall continue to negotiate until the last moment."

THE German Ambassador came to-night and again urged on M. Sazonof, but in less categorical terms, that Russia should cease her military preparations, and affirmed that Austria would not infringe the territorial integrity of Servia :—

"It is not only the territorial integrity of Servia which we must safeguard," answered M. Sazonof, "but also her independence and her sovereignty. We cannot allow Servia to become a vassal of Austria."

M. Sazonof added :—"The situtation is too serious for me not to tell you all that is in my mind. By intervening at St. Pertersburgh while she refuses to intervene at Vienna, Germany is only seeking to gain time so as to allow Austria to crush the little Servian kingdom before Russia can come to its aid. But the Emperor Nicholas is so anxious to prevent war that I am going to make a new proposal to you in his name :—

"If Austria recognising that her dispute with Servia has assumed the character of a question of European interest, delares herself ready to eliminate from her ultimatum the clauses which are damaging to the sovereignty of Servia, Russia undertakes to stop all military preparations."

Count Pourtalès promised to support this proposal with his Government.

In the mind of M. Sazonof, the acceptance of this proposal by Austria would have, as a logical corollary, the opening of a discussion by the Powers in London.

The Russian Government again show by their attitude that they are neglecting nothing in order to stop the conflict.

IN spite of the communication made yesterday by the Russian Ambassador to several of his colleagues, among them the German Ambassador, with reference to the partial mobilisation in his country, the Vienna press refrained from publishing the news. This enforced silence has just been explained at an interview of great importance between M. Schebeko and Count Berchtold, who examined at length the present formidable difficulties with equal readiness to apply to them mutually acceptable solutions.

M. Schebeko explained that the only object of the military preparations on the Russian side was to reply to those made by Austria, and to indicate the intention and the right of the Tsar to formulate his views on the settlement of the Servian question. The steps towards mobilisation taken in Galicia, answered Count Berchtold, have no aggressive intention and are only directed towards maintaining the situation as it stands. On both sides endeavours will be made to prevent these measures from being interpreted as signs of hostility

With a view to settling the Austro-Servian dispute it was agreed that pourparlers should be resumed at St. Petersburg between M. Sazonof and Count Szápáry; they had only been interrupted owing to a misunderstanding, as Count Berchtold thought that the Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs claimed that the Austrian representative should be given powers which would allow him to modify the terms of the Austrian ultimatum. Count Szápáry will only be authorised to discuss what settlement would be compatible with the dignity and prestige for which both Empires had equal concern.

It would therefore for the moment be in this direct form, and only between the two most interested Powers, that the discussion which Sir Edward Grey proposed to entrust to the four Powers not directly interested would take place.

Sir M. de Bunsen, who was with me, at once declared to M. Schebeko that the Foreign Office would entirely approve of this new procedure. Repeating the statement he made at the Ballplatz, the Russian Ambassador stated that his Government would take a much broader view than was generally supposed of the demands of the Monarchy; M. Schebeko did everything to convince Count Berchtold of the sincerity of Russia's desire to arrive at an agreement which would be acceptable to the two Empires.

The interview was carried on in a friendly tone and gave reason for thinking that all chances of localising the dispute were not lost, when the news of the German mobilisation arrived at Vienna.

HERR VON JAGOW telephoned to me at 2 o'clock that the news of the German mobilisation which had spread an hour before was false, and asked me to inform you of this urgently; the Imperial Government is confiscating the extra editions of the papers which announced it. But neither this communication nor these steps diminish my apprehension with regard to the plans of Germany.

It seems certain that the Extraordinary Council held yesterday evening at Potsdam with the military authorities under the presidency of the Emperor decided on mobilisation, and this explains the preparation of the special edition of the Lokal Anzeiger, but that from various causes (the declaration of England that she reserved her entire liberty of action, the exchange of telegrams between the Tsar and William II.) the serious measures which had been decided upon were suspended.

One of the Ambassadors with whom I have very close relations saw Herr von Zimmermann at 2 o'clock. According to the Under-Secretary of State the military authorities are very anxious that mobilisation should be ordered, because every delay makes Germany lose some of her advantages. Nevertheless up to the present the haste of the General Staff, which sees war in moblisation, had been successfully prevented. In any case mobilisation may be decided upon at any moment. I do not know who has issued in the Lokal Anzeiger, a paper which is usually semi-official, premature news calculated to cause excitement in France.

Further, I have the strongest reasons to believe that all the measures for moblisation which can be taken before the publication of the general order of moblisation have already been taken here, and that they are anxious here to make us publish our mobilisation first in order to attribute the responsibility to us.

PLEASE inform Sir E Grey of the following facts concerning French and German military preparations. England will see from this that if France is resolved, it is not she who is taking aggressive steps.

You will direct the attention of Sir E. Grey to the decision taken by the Council of Ministers this morning; although Germany has made her covering dispositions a few hundred metres from the frontier along the whole front from Luxemburg to the Vosges, and has transported her covering troops to their war positions, we have kept our troops ten kilometres from the frontier and forbidden them to approach nearer.

Our plan, conceived in the spirit of the offensive, provided however, that the fighting positions of our covering troops should be as near to the frontier as possible. By leaving a strip of territory undefended against sudden aggression of the enemy, the Government of the Republic hopes to prove that France does not bear, any more than Russia, the responsibility for the attack.

In order to be convinced of this it is sufficient to compare the steps taken on the two sides of our frontier; in France, soldiers who were on leave were not recalled until we were certain that Germany had done so five days before.

In Germany, not only have the garrison troops of Metz been pushed up to the frontier, but they have been reinforced by units transported by train from garrisons of the interior such as Treves or Cologne; nothing like this has been done in France.

The arming of positions on the frontier (clearing of trees, placing of armament, construction of batteries and protection of railway junctions) was begun in Germany on Saturday, the 25th; with us it is going to be begun, for France can no longer refrain from taking similar measures.

The railway stations were occupied by the military in Germany on Saturday, the 25th; in France on Tuesday, the 28th.

Finally, in Germany the reservists by tens of thousands have been recalled by individual summons, those living abroad (the classes of 1903 to 1911) have been recalled, the officers of reserve have been summoned; in the interior the roads are closed, motor-cars only circulate with permits. It is the last stage before mobilisation. None of these measures have been taken in France.

The German army has its outposts on our frontier; on two occasions yesterday German patrols penetrated our territory. The whole 16th army corps from Metz, reinforced by part of the 8th from Treves and Cologne, occupies the frontier from Metz to Luxemburg; the 15th army corps from Strassburg is massed on the frontier.

Under penalty of being shot, the inhabitants of the annexed parts of Alsace-Lorraine are forbidden to cross the frontier.

PRINCE LICHNOWSKY has not brought any reply to the request addressed to him by Sir E. Grey yesterday to obtain from the German Government a formula for the intervention of the four Powers in the interest of peace. But my German colleague questioned the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs about the military preparations of England.

Sir E. Grey replied that they were not of an offensive character, but that in the present state of affairs on the continent it was natural to take some precautions; that in England, as in France, there was a desire to maintain peace and that if in England, as in France, defensive measures were under consideration, it was not with the object of making any aggression.

The information which your Excellency has addressed to me on the subject of the military measures taken by Germany on the French frontier gave me the opportunity of remarking to Sir E. Grey that it is no longer a question of a conflict of influence between Russia and Austria-Hungary, but that there is a risk of an act of aggression which might provoke general war.

Sir E. Grey understood my feelings perfectly and he thinks, as I do, that the moment has come to consider and discuss together every hypothesis.

IN the interview which I had to-day with the Secretary of State, I asked Herr von Jagow what reply he had made to Sir E. Grey, who had asked him to draw up himself the formula for the intervention of the disinterested Powers.

He answered that "to gain time," he had decided to act directly, and that he had asked Austria to tell him the ground on which conversations might be opened with her. This answer has the effect, under a pretext of proceeding more quickly, of eliminating England, France and Italy, and of entrusting to Herr von Tschirsky, whose Pan-German and Russophobe sentiments are well known, the duty of persuading Austria to adopt a conciliatory attitude.

Herr von Jagow then spoke to me of the Russian mobilisation on the Austrian frontier; he told me that this mobilisation compromised the success of all intervention with Austria, and that everything depended on it. He added that he feared that Austria would mobilise completely as a result of a partial Russian mobilisation, and this might cause as a countermeasure complete Russian mobilisation and consequently that of Germany.

I pointed out to the Secretary of State that he had himself told me that Germany would only consider herself obliged to mobilise if Russia mobilised on her German frontiers, and that this was not being done. He replied that this was true, but that the heads of the army were insisting on it, for every delay is a loss of strength for the German army, and "that the words of which I reminded him did not constitute a firm engagement on his part."

The impression which I received from this conversation is that the chances of peace have again decreased.

At the beginning of our conversation to-day Sir E. Grey told me that Prince Lichnowsky had asked him this morning if England would observe neutrality in the conflict which is at hand. The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs replied that, if the conflict became general, England would not be able to remain neutral, and especially that if France were involved England would be drawn in.

I then asked Sir E. Grey concerning the Cabinet Council which took place this morning. He replied that after having examined the situation, the Cabinet had thought for the moment the British Government were unable to guarantee to us their intervention, that they intended to take steps to obtain from Germany and France an understanding to respect Belgian neutrality, but that before considering intervention it was necessary to wait for the situation to develop.

I asked Sir E. Grey if, before intervening, the British Government would await the invasion of French territory. I insisted on the fact that the measures already taken on our frontier by Germany showed an intention to attack in the near future, and that, if a renewal of the mistake of Europe in 1870 was to be avoided, England should consider at once the circumstances in which she would give France the help on which she relied.

Sir E. Grey replied that the opinion of the Cabinet had only been formed on the situation at the moment, that the situation might be modified, and that in that case a meeting of the Cabinet would be called together at once in order to consider it.

Sir A. Nicolson, whom I saw on leaving the room of the Secretary of State, told me that the Cabinet would meet again to-morrow, and confidentially gave me to understand that the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs would be certain to renew the discussion.

According to your instructions, I have taken the necessary steps to secure that the autograph letter which the President of the Republic has addressed to His Majesty the King of England should be given to the King this evening. This step, which will certainly be communicated to the Prime Minister to-morrow morning, will, I am sure, be taken into serious consideration by the British Cabinet.

When I asked him if he had received a similar declaration from the German Government, he told me that he was going to the German Minister to get the same declaration.

Postscript.—Up to the present no special measure has been taken by the Cabinet of Luxemburg. M. Eyschen has returned from the German Legation. M. René Viviani, President of the Council, Minister for Foreign Affairs, to the French Ambassadors at London, St. Petersburgh, Berlin, Vienna and Rome.

Paris, July 31, 1914.

THE British Ambassador has handed me a note from his Government asking the French Government to support a proposal at St. Petersburgh for the peaceful solution of the Austro-Servian conflict.

This note shows that the German Ambassador has informed Sir E. Grey of the intention of his Government to try to exercise influence on the Austro-Hungarian Government after the capture of Belgrade and the occupation of the districts bordering on the frontier, in order to obtain a promise not to advance further, while the Powers endeavoured to secure that Servia should give sufficient satisfaction to Austria; the occupied territory would be evacuated as soon as she had received satisfaction.

Sir E. Grey made this suggestion on the 29th July, and expressed the hope that military preparations would be suspended on all sides. Although the Russian Ambassador at London has informed the Secretary of State that he fears that the Russian condition (if Austria, recognising that her conflict with Servia has assumed the character of a question of European interest, declares herself ready to eliminate from her ultimatum the points which endanger the principle of Servian sovereignty, Russia undertakes to stop all military preparations) cannot be modified, Sir E. Grey thinks that, if Austria stops her advance after the occupation of Belgrade, the Russian Government could agree to change their formula in the following way.

That the Powers would examine how Servia should give complete satisfaction to Austria without endangering the sovereignty or independence of the Kingdom. In case Austria after occupying Belgrade and the neighbouring Servian territory should declare herself ready, in the interests of Europe, to stop her advance and to discuss how an arrangement might be arrived at, Russia could also consent to the discussion and suspend her military preparations, provided that the other Powers acted in the same way.

In accordance with the request of Sir E. Grey, the French Government joined in the English suggestion, and in the following terms asked their Ambassador at St. Petersburgh to try to obtain, without delay, the assent of the Russian Government :—

"Please inform M. Sazonof urgently that the suggestion of Sir E. Grey appears to me to furnish a useful basis for conversation between the Powers, who are equally desirous of working for an honourable arrangement of the Austro-Servian conflict, and of averting in this manner the dangers which threaten general peace.

"The plan proposed by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, by stopping the advance of the Austrian army and by entrusting to the Powers the duty of examining how Servia could give full satisfaction to Austria without endangering the sovereign rights and the independence of the Kingdom, by thus affording Russia a means of suspending all military preparations, while the other Powers are to act in the same way, is calculated equally to give satisfaction to Russia and to Austria and to provide for Servia an acceptable means of issue from the present difficulty.

"I would ask you carefully to be guided by the foregoing considerations in earnestly pressing M. Sazonof to give his adherence without delay to the proposal of Sir E. Grey, of which he will have been himself informed."

Nevertheless, desirous of leaving nothing undone in order to prove his sincere desire to safeguard peace, M. Sazonof informs me that he has modified his formula, requested by the British Ambassador, in the following way :—

"If Austria consents to stay the march of her troops on Servian territory, and if, recognizing that the Austro-Servian conflict has assumed the character of a question of European interest, she admits that the great Powers may examine the satisfaction which Servia can accord to the Austro-Hungarian Government, without injury to her sovereign rights as a State and to her independence, Russia undertakes to preserve her waiting attitude."

THE efforts made up till now concurrently by England and Russia with the earnest support of France (obtained in advance for every peaceful effort) with the object of a direct understanding between Vienna and St. Petersburgh, or of the mediation of the four Powers in the most appropriate form, are being united to-day; Russia, giving a fresh proof of her desire for an understanding, has hastened to reply to the first appearance of an overture made by Germany since the beginning of the crisis (as to the conditions on which Russia would stop her military preparations) by indicating a formula, and then modifying it in accordance with the request of England; there ought to be hope, therefore, negotiations having also been begun again between the Russian and Austrian Ambassadors that English mediation will complete at London that which is being attempted by direct negotiations at Vienna and St. Petersburgh.

Nevertheless, the constant attitude of Germany who, since the beginning of, the conflict, while ceaselessly protesting to each Power her peaceful intentions, has actualiy, by her dilatory or negative attitude, caused the failure of all attempts at agreement, and has not ceased to encourage through her Ambassador the uncompromising attitude of Vienna; the German military preparations begun since the 25th July and subsequently continued without cessation; the immediate opposition of Germany to the Russian formula, declared at Berlin inacceptable for Austria before that Power had even been consulted; in conclusion, all the impressions derived from Berlin bring conviction that Germany has sought to humiliate Russia, to disintegrate the Triple Entente, and if these results could not be obtained to make war.

What is called "Kriegsgefahrzustand" (the state of danger of war) has been declared, and this allows the authorities to proclaim, if they deem it expedient, a state of siege to suspend some of the public services, and to close the frontier.

Baron von Schoen finally asked me in the name of his Government, what the attitude of France would be in case of war between Germany and Russia. He told me that he would come for my reply to-morrow (Saturday) at 1 o'clock.

I have no intention of making any statement to him on this subject, and I shall confine myself to telling him that France will have regard to her interests. The Government of the Republic need not indeed give any account of her intentions except to her ally.

CHAPTER VI.

DECLARATION OF WAR BY GERMANY ON RUSSIA (SATURDAY, AUGUST 1, AT 7-10 P.M.); AND ON FRANCE (MONDAY, AUGUST, 3, AT 6-45 P.M.)

No. 120.

M. Réne Viviani President of the Council, Minister for Foreign Affairs, to the French Ambassadors at London, St. Petersburgh, Berlin, Vienna, Rome.

Paris, August 1, 1914.

Two démarches were made yesterday evening by the Austrian Ambassadors—the one at Paris, which was rather vague, the other of St. Petersburgh, precise and conciliatory.

Count Szécsen came to explain to me that the Austro-Hungarian Government had officially informed Russia that it had no territorial ambition, and would not touch the sovereignty of Servia; that it also repudiates any intention of occupying the Sandjak; but that these explanations of disinterestedness only retain their force if the war remains localised to Austria and Servia, as a European war would open out eventualities which it was impossible to foresee. The Austrian Ambassador, in commenting on these explanations, gave me to understand that if his Government could not answer the questions of the Powers speaking in their own name, they would certainly answer Servia, or any single Power asking for these conditions in the name of Servia. He added that a step in this direction was perhaps still possible.

At St. Petersburgh the Austrian Ambassador called on M. Sazonof and explained to him that his Government was willing to begin a discussion as to the basis of the ultimatum addressed to Servia. The Russian Minister declared himself satisfied with this declaration, and proposed that the pourparlers should take place in London with the participation of the Powers. M. Sazonof will have requested the English Government to take the lead in the discussion; he pointed out that it would be very important that Austria should stop her operations in Servia.

The deduction from these facts is that Austria would at last show herself ready to come to an agreement, just as the Russian Government is ready to enter into negotiations on the basis of the English proposal.

Unfortunately these arrangements which allowed one to hope for a peaceful solution appear, in fact, to have been rendered useless by the attitude of Germany. This Power has in fact presented an ultimation giving the Russian Government twelve hours in which to agree to the demobilisation of their forces not only as against Germany, but also as against Austria; this time-limit expires at noon. The ultimatum is not justified, for Russia has accepted the English proposal which implies a cessation of military preparation by all the Powers.

The attitude of Germany proves that she wishes for war. And she wishes for it against France. Yesterday when Herr von Schoen came to the Quai d'Orsay to ask what attitude France proposed to take in case of a Russo-German conflict, the German Ambassador, although there has been no direct dispute between France and Germany, and although from the beginning of the crisis we have used all our efforts for a peaceful solution and are still continuing to do so, added that he asked me to present his respects and thanks to the President of the Republic, and asked that we would be good enough to make arrangements as to him personally (des dispositions pour sa propre personne): we know also that he has already put the archives of the Embassy in safety. This attitude of breaking off diplomatic relations without any direct dispute, and although he has not received any definitely negative answer, is characteristic of the determination of Germany to make war against France. The want of sincerity in her peaceful protestations is shown by the rupture which she is forcing upon Europe at a time when Austria had at last agreed with Russia to begin negotiations.

My Russian colleague received yesterday evening two telegrams from M. Sazonof advising him that the Austrian Ambassador at St. Petersburgh had explained that his Government was ready to discuss the note to Servia with the Russian Government even as to its basis; M. Sazonof answered that in his opinion these conversations should take place in London.

The ultimatum to Russia can only do away with the last chances of peace which these conversations still seemed to leave. The question may be asked whether in such circumstances the acceptance by Austria was serious, and had not the object of throwing the responsibility of the conflict on to Russia.

My British colleague during the night made a pressing appeal to Herr von Jagow's feelings of humanity. The latter answered that the matter had gone too far and that they must wait for the Russian answer to the German ultimatum. But he told Sir Edward Goschen that the ultimatum required that the Russians should countermand their mobilisation, not only as against Germany but also as against Austria; my British colleague was much astonished at this, and said that did not seem possible for Russia to accept this last point.

Germany's ultimatum coming at the very moment when an agreement seemed about to be established between Vienna and St. Petersburgh, is characteristic of her warlike policy.

In truth the conflict was between Russia and Austria only, and Germany could only intervene as an ally of Austria; in these circumstances, as the two powers which were interested as principals were prepared for conversations, it is impossible to understand why Germany should send an ultimatum to Russia instead of continuing like all the other Powers to work for a peaceful solution, unless she desired war on her own account.

M. René Viviani, President of the Council, Minister for Foreign Affairs, to the French Ambassadors, at London, Berlin, and to the French Minister at Brussels.

Paris, August 1, 1914.

THE British Ambassador, under the instructions of his Government, came to ask me what would be the attitude of the French Government as regards Belgium in case of conflict with Germany.

I stated that, in accordance with the assurance which we had repeatedly given the Belgian Government, we intended to respect their neutrality.

It would only be in the event of some other Power violating that neutrality that France might find herself brought to enter Belgian territory, with the object of fulfilling her obligations as a guaranteeing Power.

THE British Ambasssador has been instructed by his Government to make to German Government a communication identical with that which he made to you on the subject of the neutrality of Belgium.

Herr von Jagow answered that he would take the instructions of the Emperor and the Chancellor but that he did not think an answer could be given, for Germany could not disclose her military plans in this way. The British Ambassador will see Herr von Jagow to-morrow afternoon.

Rome, August 1, 1914.

I WENT to see the Marquis di San Giuliano this morning at half-past eight, in order to get precise information from him as to the attitude of Italy in view of the provocative acts of Germany and the results which they may have.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs answered that he had seen the German Ambassador yesterday evening. Herr von Flotow had said to him that Germany had requested the Russian Government to suspend mobilisation, and the French Government to inform them as to their intentions; Germany had given France a time-limit of eighteen hours and Russia a time-limit of twelve hours.

Herr von Flotow as a result of this communication asked what were the intentions of the Italian Government.

The Marquis di San Giuliano answered that as the war undertaken by Austria was aggressive and did not fall within the purely defensive character of the Triple Alliance, particularly in view of the consequences which might result from it according to the declaration of the German Ambassador, Italy would not be able to take part in the war.

M. René Viviani, President of the Council, Minister for Foreign Affairs, to the French Ambassadors at London, St. Petersburgh, Berlin, Vienna, Rome, Madrid, Constantinople.

Paris, August 1, 1914.

THE German Ambassador came to see me again at 11 o'clock this morning. After having recalled to his memory all the efforts made by France towards an honourable settlement of the Austro-Servian conflict and the difficulty between Austria and Russia which has resulted from it. I put him in possession of the facts as to the pourparlers which have been carr ed on since yesterday :—

(1) An English compromise, proposing, besides other suggestions, suspension of military preparations on the part of Russia, on condition that the other Powers should act in the same way ; adherence of Russia to this proposal.

(2) Communications from the Austrian Government declaring that they did not desire any aggrandisement in Servia, nor even to advance into the Sandjak, and stating that they were ready to discuss even the basis of the Austro-Servian question at London with the other Powers.

I drew attention to the attitude of Germany who, abandoning all pourparlers, presented an ultimatum to Russia at the very moment when this Power had just accepted the English formula (which implies the cessation of military preparations by all the countries which have mobilised) and regarded as imminent a diplomatic rupture with France.

Baron von Schoen answered that he did not know the developments which had taken place in this matter for the last twenty-four hours, that there was perhaps in them a "glimmer of hope" for some arrangement, that he had not received any fresh communication from his Government, and that he was going to get information. He gave renewed protestations of his sincere desire to unite his efforts to those of France for arriving at a solution of the conflict. I laid stress on the serious responsibility which the Imperial Government would assume if, in circumstances such as these, they took an initiative which was not justified and of a kind which would irremediably compromise peace.

Baron von Schoen did not allude to his immediate departure and did not make any fresh request for an answer to his question concerning the attitude of France in case of an Austro-Russian conflict. He confined himself to saying of his own accord that the attitude of France was not doubtful.

It would not do to exaggerate the possibilities which may result from my conversation with the German Ambassador for, on their side, the Imperial Government continue the most dangerous preparations on our frontier. However, we must not neglect the possibilities, and we should not cease to work towards an agreement. On her side France is taking all military measures required for protection against too great an advance in German military preparations. She considers that her attempts at solution will only have a chance of success so far as it is felt that she will be ready and resolute if the conflict is forced on her.

SIR Edward Grey said to me that, at a meeting this morning, the Cabinet had again considered the situation. As Germany had asked England to give a declaration of neutrality and had not obtained it, the British Government remained masters of their action ; this could shape itself in accordance with different hypotheses.

In the first place, Belgian neutrality is of great importance to England. France has immediately renewed her engagement to respect it. Germany has explained " that she was not in a position to reply." Sir Edward Grey will put the Cabinet in possession of this answer and will ask to be authorized to state on Monday in the House of Commons, that the British Government will not permit a violation of Belgian neutrality.

In the second place, the English fleet is mobilised, and Sir Edward Grey will propose to his colleagues that he should state that it will oppose the passage of the Straits of Dover by the German fleet, or, if the German fleet should pass through (venaient à le passer), will oppose any demonstration on the French coasts. These two questions will be dealt with at the meeting on Monday. I drew the attention of the Secretary of State to the point that, if during this intervening period any incident took place, it was necessary not to allow a surprise, and that it would be desirable to think of intervening in time.

PAUL CAMBON.

No. 127.

M. René Viviani, President of the Council, Minister for Foreign Affairs, to M. Paul Cambon, French Ambassador at London.

Paris, August 1, 1914.

WE are warned through several channels that the German and the Austrian Governments are trying at this moment to influence England by making her believe that the responsibility for war, if it breaks out, will fall on Russia. Efforts are being made to obtain the neutrality of England by disguising the truth.

France has not ceased in co-operation with England to advise moderation at St. Petersburgh ; this advice has been listened to.

From the beginning M. Sazonof has exercised pressure on Servia to make her accept all those clauses of the ultimatum which were not incompatible with her sovereignty.

He then engaged in a direct conversation with Austria; this was fresh evidence of his conciliatory spirit. Finally he has agreed to allow those Powers which are less interested to seek for means of composing the dispute.

In accordance with the wish expressed to him by Sir George Buchanan. M. Sazonof consented to modify the first formula which he had put forward, and he has drawn up a second which is shown not to differ materially from the declaration which Count Scézsen made yesterday to M. de Margerie. Count Scézsen affirms that Austria has no intention of seeking territorial aggrandisement and does not wish to touch the sovereignty of Servia. He expressly adds that Austria has no designs on the Sandjak of Novi-Bazar.

It would then seem that an agreement between Sir Edward Grey's suggestion, M. Sazonof's formula and the Austrian declarations could easily be reconciled.

France is determined, in co-operation with England, to work to the very end for the realisation of this.

But while these negotiations were going on, and while Russia in the negotiations showed a good will which cannot be disputed, Austria was the first to proceed to a general mobilisation.

Russia has found herself obliged to imitate Austria, so as not to be left in an unfavourable position, but all the time she has continued ready to négotiate.

It is not necessary for me to repeat that, so far as we are concerned, we will, in co-operation with England, continue to work for the success of these pourparlers.

But the attitude of Germany has made it absolutely compulsory for us to make out the order for mobilisation to-day.

Last Wednesday, well in advance of Russian mobilisation, as I have already telegraphed to you, Herr von Schoen announced to me the impending publication of Kriegsgefährzustand. This measure has been taken by Germany, and under the protection of this screen, she immediately began a mobilisation in the proper sense of the word.

To-day M. Paléologue telegraphed that Count Pourtalès had notified the Russian Government of German mobilisation.

Information which has been received by the Ministry of War confirms the fact that this mobilisation is really in full execution.

Our decree of mobilisation is then an essential measure of protection. The Government have accompanied it by a proclamation signed by the President of the Republic and by all the Ministers, in which they explain that mobilisation is not war, and that in the present state of affairs it is the best means for France of safeguarding peace, and that the Government of the Republic will redouble their efforts to bring the negotiations to a conclusion.

Will you be good enough to bring all these points urgently to the notice of Sir Edward Grey, and to point out to him that we have throughout been governed by the determination not to commit any act of provocation.

I am persuaded that in case war were to break out, English opinion would see clearly from which side aggression comes, and that it would realise the strong reasons which we have given to Sir Edward Grey for asking for armed intervention on the part of England in the interest of the future of the European balance of power.

Luxemburg, August 1, 1914.

THE Minister of State instructs me to ask from the French Government an assurance of neutrality similar to that which has been given to Belgium. M. Eyschen has stated that at present, as the declaration in question was made to the President of the Council of the Belgian Government by the French Minister at Brussels, he thought that the same procedure would be most suitable with regard to the Grand Duchy.

This is the reason why he has abstained from making a request direct to the Government of the Republic. As the Chamber of Deputies meets on Monday, M. Eyschen wishes to have the answer by that date; a similar demarche is being made at the same time with the German Minister at Luxemburg.

BE good enough to state to the President of the Council that in conformity with the Treaty of London, 1867, the Government of the Republic intends to respect the neutrality of the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, as they have shown by their attitude.

The violation of this neutrality by Germany, would however, be an act of a kind which would compel France from that time to be guided in this matter by care for her defence and her interest.

M. Eyschen, Minister of State for Luxemburg, to M. René Viviani, President of the Council, Minister for Foreign Affairs

Luxemburg, August 2, 1914.

I HAVE the honour to bring to your Excellency's notice the following facts:—

On Sunday, the 2nd August, very early, German troops, according to the information which has up to now reached the Grand Ducal Government, penetrated nto Luxemburg territory by the bridges of Wasserbillig and Remich, and proceeded especially towards the south and in the direction of Luxemburg, the capital of of the Grand Duchy. A certain number of armoured trains with troops and ammunition have been sent along the railway line from Wasserbillig to Luxemburg, where their arrival is immediately expected. These occurrences constitute acts which are manifestly contrary to the neutrality of the Grand Duchy as guaranteed by the Treaty of London of 1867. The Luxemburg Government have not failed to address an energetic protest against this aggression to the representatives of His Majesty the German Emperor at Luxemburg. An identical protest will be sent by telegraph to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs at Berlin.

The Minister of State,
President of the Government.

THE Minister of State for Luxemburg, M. Eyschen, has just received, through Herr von Buch, German Minister at Luxemburg, a telegram from Bethmann-Hollweg, Chancellor of the German Empire, saying that the military measures taken by Germany in Luxemburg do not constitute a hostile act against this country, but are solely measures tended to assure the use of the railways which have been leased to the Empire against the eventual attack of a French army. Luxemburg will receive a complete indemnity for any damage.

THIS morning, French territory was violated by German troops at Ciry and near Longwy. They are marching on the fort which bears the latter name. Elsewhere the Custom House at Delle has twice been fired upon. Finally, German troops have also violated this morning the neutral territory of Luxemburg.

You will at once use this information to lay stress on the fact that the German Government is committing itself to acts of war against France without provocation on our part, or any previous declaration of war, whilst we have scrupulously respected the zone of ten kilometres which we have maintained, even since the mobilisation, between our troops and the frontier.

AFTER the meeting of the Cabinet held this morning Sir Edward Grey made the following declaration to me :—

> "I am authorised to give an assurance that, if the German fleet comes into the Channel or through the North Sea to undertake hostile operations against French coasts or shipping, the British fleet will give all the protection in its power.
> "This assurance is of course subject to the policy of His Majesty's Government receiving the support of Parliament, and must not be taken as binding His Majesty's Government to take any action until the above contingency of action by the German fleet takes place."

Afterwards in speaking to me of the neutrality of Belgium and that of Luxemburg, the Secretaty of State reminded me that the Convention of 1867, referring to the Grand Duchy, differed from the Treaty referring to Belgium, in that England was bound to require the observance of this latter Convention without the assistance of the other guaranteeing Powers, while with regard to Luxemburg all the guaranteeing Powers were to act in concert.

The protection of Belgian neutrality is here considered so important that England will regard its violation by Germany as a casus belli. It is a specially English interest and there is no doubt that the British Government, faithful to the traditions of their policy, will insist upon it, even if the business world in which German influence is making tenacious efforts, exercises pressure to prevent the Government committing itself against Germany.

In communicating to the Chambers the declaration which Sir Edward Grey has made to you, the text of which is contained in your last telegram, I will add that in it we have obtained from Great Britain a first assistance which is most valuable to us.

In addition, I propose to indicate that the help which Great Britain intends to give to France for the protection of the French coasts or the French merchant marine, will be used in such a way that our navy will also, in case of a Franco-German conflict, be supported by the English fleet in the Atlantic as well as in the North Sea and Channel. In addition I would note that English ports could not serve as places for revictualling for the German fleet.

GERMAN troops having to-day violated the eastern frontier at several points, I request you immediately to protest in writing to the German Government. You will be good enough to take as your text the following note which, in the uncertainty of communications between Paris and Berlin, I have addressed directly to the German Ambassador :—

"The French administrative and military authorities in the eastern district have just reported several acts which I have instructed the Ambassador of the Republic at Berlin to bring to the knowledge of the Imperial Government.

"The first has taken place at Delle in the district of Belfort; on two occasions the French Customs station in this locality has been fired upon by a detachment of German soldiers. North of Delle two German patrols of the 5th Mounted Jaegers crossed the frontier this morning and advanced to the villages of Joncherey and Baron, more than ten kilometres from the frontier. The officer who commanded the first has blown out the brains of a French soldier. The German cavalry carried off some horses which the French Mayor of Suarce was collecting and forced the inhabitants of the commune to lead the said horses.

"The Ambassador of the Republic at Berlin has been instructed to make a formal protest to the Imperial Government against acts which form a flagrant violation of the frontier by German troops in arms, and which are not justified by anything in the present situation. The Government of the Republic can only leave to the Imperial Government the entire responsibility for these acts."

YESTERDAY evening the German Minister handed to the Belgian Government an ultimatum stating that his Government, having learnt that the French were preparing for operations in the district of Givet and Namur, were compelled to take steps, the first of which was to invite the Belgian Government to inform them, within 7 hours, if they were disposed to facilitate military operations in Belgium against France. In case of refusal the fortune of war would decide.

The Government of the King answered that the information as to the French movements appeared to them to be inaccurate in view of the formal assurances which had been given by France, and were still quite recent; that Belgium, which since the establishment of her kingdom, has taken every care to assure the protection of her dignity and of her interests, and has devoted all her efforts to peaceful development of progress, strongly protests against any violation of her territory from whatever quarter it may come: and that, supposing the violation takes place, she will know how to defend with energy her neutrality, which has been guaranteed by the Powers, and notably by the King of Prussia.

"It is with great sincerity that we thank the Government of the Republic for the support which it would eventually be able to offer us, but under present conditions we do not appeal to the guarantee of the Powers. At a later date the Government of the King will weigh the measures which it may be necessary to take."

Sir EDWARD GREY has authorised me to inform you that you could state to Parliament that he was making explanations to the Commons as to the present attitude of the British Government, and that the chief of these declarations would be as follows:—

> "In case the German fleet came into the Channel or entered the north Sea in order to go round the British Isles with the object of attacking the French coasts or the French navy and of harassing French merchant shipping, the English fleet would intervene in order to give to French shipping its complete protection, in such a way that from that moment England and Germany would be in a state of war."

Sir Edward Grey explained to me that the mention of an operation by way of the North Sea implied protection against a demonstration in the Atlantic Ocean.

The declaration concerning the intervention of the English fleet must be considered as binding the British Government. Sir Edward Grey has assured me of this and has added that the French Government were thereby authorised to inform the Chambers of this.
